Side-by-Side Comparison of 9/11 Commission Intelligence Reforms and Legislative Proposals

Summary

On July 22, 2004, the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon The United States (also known as the 9/11 Commission) released its bipartisan, unanimous final report containing major recommendations for far-reaching and fundamental changes to the United States Intelligence Community (IC). Almost 20 months after its creation by P.L. 107-306, the commission, as mandated by its founding legislation, attempted to present a full and complete accounting of the facts and circumstances surrounding the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, as well as recommendations for corrective measures that can be taken to prevent acts of terrorism.

Several Members of Congress also have introduced legislative proposals to reform the IC. Senators Feinstein (S. 190), Bob Graham (S. 1520) and Daschle (S. 6) have introduced legislation that either directly, or as part of broader security legislation, propose a variety of IC reforms. Representatives Harman (H.R. 4104) and Goss (H.R. 4584) have introduced comprehensive intelligence reform legislation.

In response to the 9/11 Commission's recommendations, President Bush has put forward several proposals with regard to intelligence reform, agreeing with the 9/11 Commission recommendations that the position of the National Intelligence Director, and the National Counterterrorism Center, be established. The Administration has yet to propose a detailed legislative reform package.

This report presents a side-by-side comparison of the 9/11 Commission recommendations; President George W. Bush's proposals; legislative proposals contained in legislation introduced by Senators Feinstein, Bob Graham, and Daschle; Representatives Harman and Goss; and relevant provisions of current statute, if they exist.

This report will be updated as warranted.

Side-by-Side Comparison of 9/11 Commission Intelligence Reforms and Legislative Proposals

Introduction

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon The United States (henceforth referred to as the 9/11 Commission)¹ on July 22, 2004, issued its recommendations for comprehensive reform of the United States Intelligence Community (IC). The Commission recommended several potentially far-reaching changes, including the creation of the position of National Intelligence Director (NID), and a new National Counterterrorism Center (NCTC). The Commission urged that an NID be given a full range of powers not now currently available to the Director of Central Intelligence (DCI). Those powers would include (1) budget authority; (2) hire and fire authority over senior IC managers; (3) the ability to set standards for the IC's information infrastructure and personnel.²

Senator Feinstein's legislation (S. 190) proposes that the position of Director of National Intelligence (DNI) be established. Senator Bob Graham's bill (S. 1520) introduced broader legislation that contained DNI language identical to Sen Feinstein's. Senator Daschle (S. 6) also introduced broader security legislation containing almost identical DNI language. All three bills would enhance the DNI's budget authorities, including permitting the DNI to unilaterally transfer funds and personnel between agencies within the IC during the year the intelligence budget is executed. Under current statute, an IC agency head whose agency would be affected by such a transfer has the authority to prevent such a transfer. The DNI would continue to exercise the limited personnel authorities contained in current statute.

Representative Harman's bill (H.R. 4104) also would establish the position of a DNI with enhanced funding and personnel transfer authorities, albeit more limited than those contained in the Senate bills. Rather than provide the DNI unilateral authority in this area, the Harman language specifies that the President would arbitrate any disagreement between the DNI and an agency head over a DNI-initiated funds or personnel transfer, provided the agency head submitted his or her objection to the President in writing. The Harman bill also would “dual hat” the Under Secretary of Defense for Intelligence, who would also serve as the Deputy Director of National Intelligence. The bill also proposes the creation of a Deputy Director of National Intelligence for Operations and a Joint Tasking Organization. Finally, the Harman legislation would provide the DNI some degree of enhanced personnel authorities over those enjoyed by the DCI under current statute.

Representative Goss’ (H.R. 4584) legislation adopts a different approach to intelligence reform. Rather than creating the position of NDI, his bill would leave the DCI in charge of both the CIA and the IC, as is currently the case, while strengthening some DCI authorities. For example, it would repeal the current prohibition pertaining to the DCI exercising internal security functions. With regard to funds and personnel transfer authorities, the bill would strengthen some of the DCI’s current authority by providing the DCI the unilateral authority to move funds and personnel. The bill further stipulates that the DCI coordinate such transfers with the Director of the Office of Management and Budget (OMB), rather than obtain his or her approval, as is required under current law. Finally, the Goss bill would provide the DNI some enhanced personnel authorities.
