United Nations Regular Budget Contributions: Members Compared, 1989-2005

Summary

Starting January 1, 2001, the United States was assessed to pay 22% of the annual United Nations regular budget. For calendar year 2005, 22% of the U.N. regular budget amounted to $439,611,612. Prior to January 1, 2001, the assessment level for the United States was 25%. This report shows, for the years 1989 through 2005, the assessment level, actual payment, and total outstanding contributions for the United States and each of the other U.N. members assessed at 1% or higher. For 2004 and 2005, a new category was added: the eight countries with assessments at 0.5% or larger but less than 1%. Three of these countries had, at some time since 1989, been assessed at 1%. Aggregated figures are provided for the rest of the U.N. membership. In 2005, the United States and 16 other nations were assessed to pay 86.408% of the U.N. budget. Contributors in the middle category were collectively assessed to pay 5.986%.

In 2005, of the top 17 assessed countries, Brazil and the United States failed to pay their entire assessment and maintained unpaid or outstanding contributions. The matter of U.S. funding to the United Nations has been a high-profile congressional issue for a number of years. This report is updated annually, as the U.N. document upon which the data is based is published.

Background

During consideration of funding requests for U.S. participation in international organizations, Congress frequently raises questions regarding the assessment level for the United States for its contributions to the United Nations regular budget. Prior to January 1, 2001, the U.S. assessment level was 25%. On December 23, 2000, the U.N. General Assembly lowered the ceiling for the largest contributor to the U.N. regular budget — that is, the United States — from 25% to 22%. This Assembly action was in response to Administration efforts to satisfy the conditions set by Congress for release of funds appropriated for U.S. payment of its arrearages to the U.N. regular budget and U.N. peacekeeping accounts.<sup>1</sup>

Determining Scale of Assessments

Article 17 of the U.N. Charter specifies that the U.N. General Assembly will determine the basis for payment of the expenses of the organization and the Assembly has decided that these expenses will be assessed “broadly according to capacity to pay.” An 18-member expert Committee on Contributions meets annually to review the scale of assessments.<sup>2</sup> Every third year, the Committee reevaluates the scale in preparation for a General Assembly decision approving the scale for the following three-year period. A revised scale for the years 2007-2009 is under discussion before the 2006 Assembly session.

On December 23, 2003, the U.N. General Assembly approved a revised scale for the years 2004-2006. According to information provided in a United Nations online pamphlet, Image and Reality, the Committee uses estimates of each member State’s gross national product (GNP) and a number of adjustments, including data for external debt and for low per capita incomes. The General Assembly has also directed that percentage shares range from a minimum of 0.001% to a maximum of 22%, and a maximum of 0.01% for those nations designated as “least developed countries.” According to the U.N. information, the 22% ceiling for the largest contributor benefits the “United States, whose share of total membership GNP is approximately 27 percent.”<sup>3</sup>

Explanation of Tables

Congress often raises a number of questions about U.N. assessments. Some of the most commonly asked questions include What nations are assessed at levels similar to the U.S. level? How much does the United States pay annually and how much is outstanding at the end of the year? How does the U.S. record on payment of its assessed contributions to the U.N. regular budget compare with the rest of the membership, especially with the record of other major contributors? Which U.N. members pay the largest proportion of the U.N. regular budget?<sup>4</sup>

This report answers these questions by highlighting — for each of the past 17 years — the actual calendar year payment and the total (combined current year and prior year) outstanding contributions. (These annual payments, however, may not match the assessment for any given year.) The tables list countries that are assessed at 1% or more, their assessment level, actual payment, and contributions outstanding. Most of these countries pay their assessment in full during the calendar year. Of the countries with assessment rates of 1% or more, Argentina, Brazil, Ukraine, USSR/Russian Federation, and the United States have, on occasion, failed to pay the entire assessment and maintained unpaid or outstanding contributions. Four of the five permanent U.N. Security Council members are identified in each table and information on the fifth permanent Council member, China, is given in a footnote. Starting in 2001, China is included among the major contributors because its assessment level since 2001 exceeded 1%.

For 2004 and 2005, a new category — Middle Contributors — provides data on the eight nations that are assessed at 0.5% and over but less than 1%. This group includes three countries that formerly were assessed at 1% or over. Lastly, an aggregated figure is provided for the rest of the U.N. membership.

<sup>3</sup> See “Image and Reality: Chapter 5, ‘How are membership dues calculated?’” [<http://www.un.org/geninfo/ir/index.asp>]. A “Briefing on Methodology for Preparing the Scale of Assessments,” found on the website of the Assembly’s Fifth Committee for the 61st session, notes that the “concept of GNP... has been renamed GNI (Gross National Income)... Like GNP, GNI is an income concept, which is defined as the total income accruing to the owners of the factors of production who reside in the country regardless of where production takes place.” See slide 14 at [<http://www.un.org/ga/61/fifth/scale-method.pps>].

<sup>4</sup> For a brief discussion of the question, How is this assessment level determined?, see CRS Report RL33611, U.N. System Funding: Congressional Issues, by Marjorie Ann Browne.
