

Overview of the Congressional Budget Process

Bill Heniff Jr.

Analyst on the Congress and Legislative Process

March 20, 2008

Congressional Research Service

7-5700

www.crs.gov

RS20368

The congressional budget process, in the broadest sense, consists of the consideration and adoption of spending, revenue, and debt-limit legislation within the framework of an annual concurrent resolution on the budget. More specifically, the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (Titles I-IX of P.L. 93-344, 2 U.S.C. 601-688) provides a procedural framework for the annual adoption of a congressional budget resolution and its enforcement through points of order and an optional reconciliation process. For more information on the budget process, see the CRS Guides to Congressional Processes at <http://www.crs.gov/products/guides/guidehome.shtml>.

Congress begins its budget process once the President submits his budget; the President is required by law to submit a comprehensive federal budget no later than the first Monday in February. Congress is not bound by the President's budget, and through its budget process may adopt budgetary legislation reflecting different priorities than the President's.

Congressional Budget Resolution

The congressional budget resolution, the centerpiece of the congressional budget process, sets forth aggregate spending and revenue levels, and functional levels of spending, for the upcoming fiscal year and at least the following four fiscal years. As a concurrent resolution, it is not presented to the President for his signature, and, thus, does not become law. By setting forth a comprehensive statement of congressional priorities on budgetary matters, however, the budget resolution provides a framework for subsequent legislative action on the budget during each congressional session.

The House and Senate Budget Committees develop the congressional budget resolution, after receiving testimony from executive branch officials, Members of Congress, and the public, and receiving "views and estimates" statements from other congressional committees with jurisdiction over spending and revenues. The congressional budget resolution is considered under expedited procedures that limit debate and place restrictions on amendments.

The Budget Act sets April 15 as a target date for completion of the congressional budget resolution. No spending, revenue, or debt-limit legislation for the upcoming fiscal year may be considered before a budget resolution has been adopted unless the rule is waived. However, the House may consider annual appropriations bills without a waiver after May 15 if a budget resolution has not been adopted by then.

Once a budget resolution has been adopted, Congress may enforce its provisions through a complex set of points of order. For example, any legislation, or amendment, that would cause the aggregate levels to be violated is prohibited from being considered. Further, the total budget authority and outlays set forth in the budget resolution are allocated to each House and Senate committee that has jurisdiction over specific spending legislation. Any legislation, or amendment, that would cause these committee allocations to be exceeded is prohibited. Finally, the House and Senate Appropriations Committees subdivide their allocations among their respective subcommittees. A point of order may be raised against any appropriations act, or amendment, that would cause these subdivisions to be exceeded. Congress also may use reconciliation legislation (discussed below) to enforce direct spending, revenue, and debt-limit provisions of a budget resolution.

Subsequent Budgetary Legislation

Discretionary spending, which constitutes less than 40% of all federal spending, is provided and controlled through the annual appropriations process. The House and Senate Appropriations Committees have jurisdiction over appropriations measures. The subcommittees of each Appropriations Committee are each responsible for one of the regular appropriations acts. The regular appropriations acts provide budget authority for the next fiscal year. If the regular appropriations acts are not completed by October 1, Congress must adopt a continuing resolution providing stop-gap funding.

Revenues and the remaining federal spending referred to as direct spending (which funds mostly entitlements) are determined largely by existing law. No action is necessary by Congress for them to continue, although Congress usually modifies some revenue laws and direct spending programs each session. Congress may include reconciliation directives in a budget resolution in order to initiate changes in revenue, direct spending, and debt-limit laws. Reconciliation directives instruct one or more committees to recommend legislative language necessary to achieve the levels of revenues, direct spending, and debt limit agreed to in the budget resolution. The legislative language recommended by committees is packaged by the House and Senate Budget Committees “without substantive revision” into one or more reconciliation bills. In some instances, reconciliation instructions may direct a committee to report its legislative recommendations directly to its chamber. Reconciliation legislation is considered under expedited procedures that limit debate and place restrictions on amendments.

Congress also may adopt revenue, direct spending, and debt-limit measures individually. Such legislation must comply with the budget policies set forth in the budget resolution, and is subject to the points of order mentioned above.

Author Contact Information

(name redacted)
Analyst on the Congress and Legislative Process
/redacted/@crs.loc.gov, 7-....

EveryCRSReport.com

The Congressional Research Service (CRS) is a federal legislative branch agency, housed inside the Library of Congress, charged with providing the United States Congress non-partisan advice on issues that may come before Congress.

EveryCRSReport.com republishes CRS reports that are available to all Congressional staff. The reports are not classified, and Members of Congress routinely make individual reports available to the public.

Prior to our republication, we redacted names, phone numbers and email addresses of analysts who produced the reports. We also added this page to the report. We have not intentionally made any other changes to any report published on EveryCRSReport.com.

CRS reports, as a work of the United States government, are not subject to copyright protection in the United States. Any CRS report may be reproduced and distributed in its entirety without permission from CRS. However, as a CRS report may include copyrighted images or material from a third party, you may need to obtain permission of the copyright holder if you wish to copy or otherwise use copyrighted material.

Information in a CRS report should not be relied upon for purposes other than public understanding of information that has been provided by CRS to members of Congress in connection with CRS' institutional role.

EveryCRSReport.com is not a government website and is not affiliated with CRS. We do not claim copyright on any CRS report we have republished.