

Child Pornography: Constitutional Principles and Federal Statutes

(name redacted)

Legislative Attorney

October 10, 2008

Congressional Research Service

7-....

www.crs.gov

95-406

Summary

The First Amendment provides: “Congress shall make no law ... abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press.” Although the First Amendment, in general, protects pornography, the Supreme Court has held that it does not protect two types of pornography: obscenity and child pornography. Consequently, the government may, and has, banned them.

Child pornography is material that visually depicts sexual conduct by children, and is unprotected by the First Amendment even when it is not legally obscene. Federal statutes, in addition to making it a crime to transport or receive child pornography in interstate or foreign commerce, prohibit, among other things, the use of a minor in producing pornography, and provide for criminal and civil forfeiture of real and personal property used in making child pornography, and of the profits of child pornography. In addition, child pornography crimes are included among the predicate offenses that may give rise to a violation of the Federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act.

The Child Pornography Prevention Act of 1996, P.L. 104-208, 110 Stat. 3009-26, added a definition of “child pornography” that include visual depictions of what appears to be a minor engaging in explicit sexual conduct, even if no actual minor was used in producing the depiction. In Ashcroft v. Free Speech Coalition (2002), the Supreme Court held this provision unconstitutional to the extent that it prohibited pictures that were not produced with actual minors. In response to Ashcroft, Congress enacted the Prosecutorial Remedies and Other Tools to end the Exploitation of Children Today Act of 2003, or the PROTECT Act, P.L. 108-21, which would again ban some non-obscene child pornography that was produced without an actual minor.

The Children’s Internet Protection Act (CIPA), P.L. 106-554 (2000), amended three federal statutes to provide that a school or library may not use funds it receives under these statutes to purchase computers used to access the Internet, or to pay the direct costs of accessing the Internet, and may not receive universal service discounts, unless the school or library enforces a policy to block or filter minors’ Internet access to visual depictions that are obscene, child pornography, or harmful to minors; and enforces a policy to block or filter adults’ Internet access to visual depictions that are obscene or child pornography. Filters may be disabled, however, “for bona fide research or other lawful purpose.” In United States v. American Library Association (2003), the Supreme Court held CIPA constitutional.

This report ends with a chronological list and description of recently enacted child pornography statutes, through P.L. 110-358, which was signed into law on October 8, 2008.

Contents

Constitutional Principles	1
A. Obscenity	1
B. Child Pornography	2
Federal Child Pornography Statutes.....	3
A. 18 U.S.C. §§ 2251-2260	3
Section 2251	3
Section 2251A	4
Section 2252	4
Section 2252A	7
Section 2252B.....	8
Section 2252C.....	8
Section 2253	8
Section 2254	9
Section 2255	9
Section 2256	9
Section 2257	13
Section 2257A	14
Section 2258	14
Section 2259	14
Section 2260	14
B. Children’s Internet Protection Act (CIPA)	14
C. Federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO)	16
D. Money Laundering	17
Recently Enacted Federal Legislation.....	17

Contacts

Author Contact Information	19
----------------------------------	----

Constitutional Principles

The First Amendment provides: “Congress shall make no law ... abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press.”¹ In general, the First Amendment protects pornography, with this term being used to mean any erotic material. The Supreme Court, however, has held that the First Amendment does not protect two types of pornography: obscenity and child pornography. Consequently, they may be banned on the basis of their content, and federal law prohibits the mailing of child pornography as well as its transport or receipt in interstate or foreign commerce by any means, including by computer.

A. Obscenity²

Most pornography is not legally obscene; to be obscene, pornography must, at a minimum, “depict or describe patently offensive ‘hard core’ sexual conduct.” Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 27 (1973). The Supreme Court has created a three-part test, known as the Miller test, to determine whether a work is obscene. The Miller test asks:

- (a) whether the “average person applying contemporary community standards” would find that the work, taken as a whole, appeals to the prurient interest; (b) whether the work depicts or describes, in a patently offensive way, sexual conduct specifically defined by the applicable state law; and (c) whether the work, taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value.³

The Supreme Court has allowed one exception to the rule that obscenity, as defined by Miller, is not protected under the First Amendment. In Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557, 568 (1969), the Court held that “mere private possession of obscene material” is protected. The Court wrote:

Whatever may be the justifications for other statutes regulating obscenity, we do not think they reach into the privacy of one’s own home. If the First Amendment means anything, it means that a State has no business telling a man, sitting alone in his house, what books he may read or what films he may watch.

Id. at 565.⁴

¹ Despite its literal words, the First Amendment applies not just to Congress, but equally to all branches of the federal government and the state governments. Gitlow v. New York, 268 U.S. 652 (1925).

² For additional information, see CRS Report 95-804, Obscenity and Indecency: Constitutional Principles and Federal Statutes, by (name redacted).

³ 413 U.S. at 24 (citation omitted). In Pope v. Illinois, 481 U.S. 497, 500 (1987), the Supreme Court clarified that “the first and second prongs of the Miller test—appeal to prurient interest and patent offensiveness—are issues of fact for the jury to determine applying contemporary community standards.” However, as for the third prong, “[t]he proper inquiry is not whether an ordinary member of any given community would find serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value in allegedly obscene material, but whether a reasonable person would find such value in the material, taken as a whole.”

⁴ Subsequently, however, the Supreme Court rejected the claim that under Stanley there is a constitutional right to provide obscene material for private use (United States v. Reidel, 402 U.S. 351 (1971)), or to acquire it for private use (United States v. 12 200-Ft. Reels of Film, 413 U.S. 123 (1973)). The right to possess obscene material does not imply the right to provide or acquire it, because the right to possess it “reflects no more than ... the law’s ‘solicitude to protect the privacies of the life within [the home].’” Id. at 127.

B. Child Pornography

Child pornography is material that “visually depicts sexual conduct by children below a specified age.”⁵ New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747, 764 (1982) (emphasis in original). It is unprotected by the First Amendment even when it is not legally obscene; i.e., child pornography need not meet the Miller test to be banned.⁶ However, the Court held in Ferber that, as with obscenity, the conduct to be prohibited must be defined by the applicable state law,⁷ as written or authoritatively construed.... The category of “sexual conduct” proscribed must also be suitably limited and described.

Id. at 764.

In Massachusetts v. Oakes, 491 U.S. 576, 579 (1989), the Supreme Court considered a Massachusetts statute that made it a crime knowingly to permit a child under 18 “to pose or to be exhibited in a state of nudity ... for purpose of visual representation or reproduction in any book, magazine, pamphlet, motion picture film, photograph, or picture.” The defendant in the case had been convicted for taking topless photographs of his 14-year-old stepdaughter, but the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court reversed on the ground that the statute was overbroad because it would make “a criminal of a parent who takes a frontal view picture of his or her naked one-year-old running on a beach or romping in a wading pool.” Id. at 581. While the case was pending before the Supreme Court, the statute was amended to allow convictions only where nude pictures are taken “with lascivious intent.” This amendment made moot the question of whether the statute under which the defendant was convicted was overbroad. However, it left open the question whether the statute under which the defendant was convicted could constitutionally be applied to him; i.e., whether his conduct was protected by the First Amendment. The Supreme Court remanded the case for this to be decided.

In Osborne v. Ohio, 495 U.S. 103 (1990), the Supreme Court held that the Stanley v. Georgia right to possess obscene material in one’s home does not extend to child pornography. The difference is that:

In Stanley, Georgia primarily sought to proscribe the private possession of obscenity because it was concerned that obscenity would poison the minds of its viewers. We responded that “[w]hatever the power of the state to control public dissemination of ideas inimical to the public morality, it cannot constitutionally premise legislation on the desirability of controlling a person’s private thoughts.”

Id. at 109 (citations omitted).

In Osborne, by contrast,

⁵ Federal law now prohibits some child pornography that was produced without the use of actual minors, but the Supreme Court has declared that such child pornography is protected by the First Amendment. See the discussions of “Section 2252A” and “Section 2256,” below.

⁶ In Ferber, the Court noted that a trier of fact “need not find that the material appeals to the prurient interest of the average person; it is not required that sexual conduct portrayed be done so in a patently offensive manner; and the material need not be considered as a whole.” 458 U.S. at 764.

⁷ Or federal law. For the federal statutory definition of “child pornography,” see “Section 2256,” below.

the State does not rely on a paternalistic interest in regulating Osborne’s mind. Rather, Ohio has enacted [its statute prohibiting possession of child pornography] in order to protect the victims of child pornography; it hopes to destroy a market for the exploitative use of children.... It is ... surely reasonable for the State to conclude that it will decrease the production of child pornography if it penalizes those who possess and view the product, thereby decreasing demand.... Other interests also support the Ohio law. First, as Ferber recognized, the materials produced by child pornography permanently record the victim’s abuse. The pornography’s continued existence causes the child victims continuing harm by haunting the children in years to come. The State’s ban on possession and viewing encourages possessors of these materials to destroy them. Second, encouraging the destruction of these materials is also desirable because evidence suggests that pedophiles use child pornography to seduce other children into sexual activity.

Id. at 109-111 (citations omitted).

In Ashcroft v. Free Speech Coalition, 535 U.S. 234 (2002), the Supreme Court held that child pornography that is produced without using an actual minor is protected by the First Amendment. We discuss this case in the section below titled “Section 2256.”

Federal Child Pornography Statutes

Federal child pornography statutes are codified at 18 U.S.C. §§ 2251-2260. These sections, including selected court cases that have ruled on their constitutionality or interpreted them, are summarized in numerical order. After that, the Children’s Internet Protection Act and the Federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) are considered, to the extent that they incorporate child pornography crimes.

A. 18 U.S.C. §§ 2251-2260⁸

Section 2251

Sexual exploitation of children. Subsection (a) of this section makes it a crime to use a minor in child pornography if the pornography has one of three specified connections to commerce. The phrase “use a minor in child pornography” in the preceding sentence is a synopsis of the following statutory language:

employs, uses, persuades, induces, entices, or coerces any minor to engage in, or ... transports any minor in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce, or in any Territory or Possession of the United States, with the intent that such minor engage in, any sexually explicit conduct for the purpose of producing any visual depiction of such conduct

Subsection (b) makes it a crime for “[a]ny parent, legal guardian, or person having custody or control of a minor” knowingly to permit such minor to engage in child pornography that has one of three specified connections to commerce.

⁸ The summaries and quotations of the statutes in this section of the report include amendments made to the first four of them by the Effective Child Pornography Prosecution Act of 2007 (Title I of P.L. 110-358) and by the Enhancing the Effective Prosecution of Child Pornography Act of 2007 (Title II of P.L. 110-358). P.L. 110-358 was signed into law on October 8, 2008.

Subsection (d) makes it a crime for any person knowingly to publish notices or advertisements for child pornography or for “participation in any act of sexually explicit conduct by or with any minor for the purpose of producing a visual depiction of such conduct,” if “such person knows or has reason to know that such notice or advertisement will be transported using any means or facility of interstate or foreign commerce or in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce by any means including by computer or mailed,” or if “such notice or advertisement is transported using any means or facility of interstate or foreign commerce or in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce by any means including by computer or mailed.”

Section 2251A

Selling or buying of children. This section imposes a minimum 30-year sentence on “[a]ny parent, legal guardian, or other person having custody or control of a minor who sells or otherwise transfers custody or control of such minor, or offers to sell or otherwise transfer custody or control of such minor” (1) with knowledge that, as a consequence of the sale or transfer, the minor will be portrayed in child pornography, or (2) with intent to promote the participation of the minor in child pornography. It imposes the same sentence on the person who purchases or otherwise obtains custody or control of the child for one of these purposes. “Custody or control” is defined to include “temporary supervision or responsibility for a minor whether legally or illegally obtained.” 18 U.S.C. § 2256(7).

In order for a person to be guilty under § 2251A, there must be a nexus with interstate or foreign commerce, namely that, in the course of the offense, either the minor or the defendant have traveled or be transported in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce, the offer for transfer of custody or control have been “communicated or transported using any means or facility of interstate or foreign commerce or in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce by any means including by computer or mail,” or the offense have been committed in a territory or possession of the United States.

Section 2252

Certain activities relating to material involving the sexual exploitation of minors. This section, unlike § 2252A, applies only to child pornography that depicts actual children. It makes it a crime (1) knowingly to transport or ship child pornography by any means, including by computer or mail, (2) knowingly to receive or distribute child pornography that has been transported or shipped in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce by any means including by computer or mail, and (3) knowingly to reproduce child pornography for distribution in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce by any means including by computer or mail.

Section 2252 also makes it a crime, in two situations, knowingly to possess or to access with intent to view “1 or more books, magazines, periodicals, films, video tapes, or other matter which contain any visual depiction ... of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct.” It shall be an affirmative defense, however, that the defendant “possessed less than three matters containing [such] visual depiction” and “promptly and in good faith, and without retaining or allowing any person other than a law enforcement agency, to access any [such] visual depiction ... (A) took reasonable steps to destroy each such visual depiction; or (B) reported the matter to a law enforcement agency and afforded that agency access to each such visual depiction.” 18 U.S.C. § 2252(c).⁹

The two situations in which the crime of knowing possession and the affirmative defense apply are: (1) “in the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States, or on any land or building owned by, leased to, or otherwise used by or under the control of the Government of the United States, or in the Indian country as defined in section 1151 of this title,” and (2) if the material “has been mailed, or has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce, or ... was produced using materials which have been mailed or so shipped or transported, by any means including by computer.” 18 U.S.C. § 2252(a)(4).¹⁰

In the most natural grammatical reading of § 2252, the word “knowingly” applies to transporting, shipping, receiving, or distributing child pornography, but does not require that the person doing these things know that the material is child pornography. Nevertheless, in United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U.S. 64 (1994), the Supreme Court held that the statute must be read to require that the defendant knew that the material depicted sexually explicit conduct and that at least one of the performers was a minor. The Court read the statute this way “because of anomalies that would result from [the most natural grammatical reading of the statute], and because of the respective presumptions that some form of scienter [knowledge] is to be implied in a criminal statute even if not expressed, and that a statute is to be construed where fairly possible so as to avoid substantial constitutional questions.” Id. at 68-69.

As for anomalies that would result from limiting the application of “knowingly” to the acts of transporting, shipping, receiving, and distributing, the Court observed that doing so would make the statute apply to a retail druggist who returns an uninspected roll of developed film to a customer, and would make it apply to a new resident of an apartment who receives the mail for the prior resident and stores it unopened. As for constitutional questions to be avoided, in Smith v. California, 361 U.S. 147, 153 (1959), the Supreme Court held that the First Amendment prohibits prosecution of a book distributor for possession of an obscene book unless the distributor has “knowledge of the contents of the book.”

In United States v. Knox, the defendant was convicted of violating § 2252 for possessing videotapes that focused on the genitalia and pubic area of minor females, even though those body parts were covered by opaque clothing.¹¹ The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit affirmed, and the Supreme Court agreed to hear the case, but the Solicitor General filed a brief for the United States agreeing with the defendant that the statute did not apply to depictions of clothed children. In November 1993, the Supreme Court sent the case back to the Third Circuit for reconsideration

⁹ P.L. 105-314, § 203(a), changed “3 or more” to “1 or more” and added the affirmative defense.

¹⁰ Prior to P.L. 110-358’s amending § 2252(a) to change “in interstate or foreign commerce” to “in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce,” a federal court of appeals reversed a conviction under § 2252(a) because the provision’s requirement that child pornography move “in commerce” “signifies a movement between states,” and “mere connection to the Internet would not provide the interstate movement required by the statute.” Rather, the government must prove that an Internet transmission traveled across state lines. The court added that, in Congress’s “use of the ‘in commerce’ language, as opposed to phrasing such as ‘affecting commerce’ or a ‘facility of interstate commerce,’” it “elected not to reach all the conduct it could have regulated under § 2252(a).” United States v. Schaefer, 501 F.3d 1197, 1201 (10th Cir. 2007).

¹¹ 977 F.2d 815 (3d Cir. 1992), vacated and remanded, 510 U.S. 375 (1993); 32 F.3d 733 (3d Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1109 (1995). For additional information on the Knox case, see CRS Report 94-753, The Knox “Clothed Children” Child Pornography Case and the Congressional Response, by (name redacted). (Out of print; available from author.)

in light of the Solicitor General's opinion. The Third Circuit, nevertheless, in June 1994, reaffirmed Knox's conviction. Knox again asked the Supreme Court to hear the case, and this time the Solicitor General agreed with the Third Circuit that the statute applied to depictions of clothed children. The Supreme Court, however, declined to review the case, and Knox's conviction stands.

Between the Supreme Court's two actions, Congress apparently amended the statute to apply explicitly to depictions of clothed children. P.L. 103-322, § 160003(a) (1994), states:

The Congress declares that in enacting sections 2252 and 2256 of title 18, United States Code, it was and is the intent of Congress that—

(1) the scope of "exhibition of the genitals or pubic area" in section 2256(2)(E),¹² in the definition of "sexually explicit conduct," is not limited to nude exhibitions or exhibitions in which the outlines of those areas were discernible through clothing; and

(2) the requirements in section 2252(a) (1)(A), (2)(A), (3)(B)(i), and (4)(B)(i) that the production of a visual depiction involve the use of a minor engaging in "sexually explicit conduct" of the kind described in section 2256(2)(E) are satisfied if a person photographs a minor in such way as to exhibit the child in a lascivious manner.¹³

¹² As amended by § 502(b) of the PROTECT Act, P.L. 108-21, the phrase "exhibition of the genitals or pubic area" now appears in 18 U.S.C. § 2256(2)(A)(v).

¹³ 18 U.S.C. § 2252 note. Congress's expression of the intent of an earlier Congress has no legal effect, as statutory interpretation is the province of the judiciary. Congress may, of course, amend a statute prospectively, but it does not often do so by "declaring" the intent of Congress with respect to a statute; rather, it changes the language of a statute. One might argue, therefore, that, in this instance, Congress was merely advising the courts as to how to interpret the earlier statute and was not amending it. However, for two reasons, the better view seems to be that it was amending the statute. First, in Stockdale v. Insurance Companies, 20 Wall. (87 U.S.) 323, 331, 332 (1874), the Supreme Court addressed a statute that provided that an earlier statute "shall be construed to...." Noting that there would be no resistance to the statute "[b]ut for the unfortunate and unnecessary use of the word 'construe,'" the Court wrote:

[A] legislative body may by statute declare the construction of previous statutes so as to bind the courts in reference to all transactions occurring after the passage of the law.... [W]here it can exercise a power by passing a new statute ... the form of words which it uses to put this power in operation cannot be material, if the purpose is clear, and that purpose is within the power.... Are we captiously to construe the use of the word "construe" as an invasion of the judicial function where the effect of the statute and the purpose of the statute are clearly within the legislative function?

Second, the subsection in question in the 1994 legislation (subsection (a) of section 160003) is headed "Declaration," whereas the following subsection (subsection (b) of section 160003), as well as the previous section (section 160002), are headed "Sense of the Congress." A court therefore would likely hold that Congress would have used the phrase "Sense of the Congress" in subsection (a) of section 160003 as well if it had not meant to amend the statute.

Because the two provisions that were headed "Sense of the Congress" concern child pornography, we quote them in their entirety here:

Sec. 160002. It is the sense of the Congress that each State that has not yet done so should enact legislation prohibiting the production, distribution, receipt, or simple possession of materials depicting a person under 18 years of age engaging in sexually explicit conduct (as defined in section 2256 of title 18, United States Code) and providing for a maximum imprisonment of at least 1 year and for the forfeiture of assets used in the commission or support of, or gained from, such offenses.

Sec. 160003(b). It is the sense of the Congress that in filing its brief in United States v. Knox, No. 92-1183, and thereby depriving the United States Supreme Court of the adverseness necessary for full and fair presentation of the issues arising in the case, the Department of Justice did not accurately reflect the intent of Congress in arguing that "the videotapes in [the Knox case] constitute 'lascivious exhibition[s] of the genitals or pubic area' only if those body parts are visible

(continued...)

Section 2252A

This section was created by the Child Pornography Prevention Act of 1996 (CPPA), P.L. 104-208, 110 Stat. 3009-26, and amended several times, including by the PROTECT Act, P.L. 108-21 (2003). The CPPA added a definition of “child pornography” to 18 U.S.C. § 2256, and this definition was also amended by the PROTECT Act. As so amended, it prohibits any “digital image, computer image, or computer-generated image that is, or is indistinguishable from, that of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct,” even if no actual minor was used to produce the image. This definition, before and after its amendment by the PROTECT Act, is discussed below under “Section 2256.”

With respect to child pornography as so defined, § 2252A, as amended by the PROTECT Act, imposes essentially the same prohibitions as § 2252, which were described above. Specifically, § 2252A(a) makes it a crime knowingly to (1) mail, transport, or ship child pornography in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce, by any means, including by computer; (2) receive or distribute child pornography that has been mailed, shipped, or transported in violation of (1);¹⁴ (3)(A) reproduce any child pornography for distribution in violation of (1); (3)(B) advertise, promote, present, distribute, or solicit any material in a manner that reflects the belief, or that is intended to cause another to believe, that the material is child pornography that is obscene or that depicts an actual minor;¹⁵ (4) sell or possess with the intent to sell child pornography that has been mailed, or shipped or transported in or affecting interstate commerce (and in specified other circumstances); (5) knowingly possess¹⁶ or knowingly access with intent to view, in specified circumstances,¹⁷ “any book, magazine, periodical, film, videotape, computer disk, or any other material that contains an image of child pornography”¹⁸; or (6) distribute, offer, send, or provide to a minor any visual depiction that is or appears to be of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct, “for purposes of inducing or persuading a minor to participate in any activity that is illegal.”

(...continued)

in the tapes and the minors posed or acted lasciviously.”

¹⁴ A federal court of appeals held that “use of the Internet satisfies the interstate commerce element of the federal law prohibiting the receipt of child pornography, 18 U.S.C. § 2252A(a)(2)(B).” United States v. MacEwan, 445 F.3d 237 (3d Cir. 2006). The court held, in other words, that the statute requires only that the defendant had used an instrumentality of interstate commerce, not that the images had crossed state lines. P.L. 110-358 (2008) subsequently added the phrase “using any means or facility of interstate commerce” to the provision.

¹⁵ In United States v. Williams, 128 S. Ct. 1830 (2008), the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of 18 U.S.C. § 2252A(a)(3)(B). It noted that, under the provision, “an Internet user who solicits child pornography from an undercover agent violates the statute, even if the officer possesses no child pornography. Likewise, a person who advertises virtual child pornography as depicting actual children also falls within the reach of the statute.” Id. at 1839. The Court found that these activities are not constitutionally protected because “[o]ffers to engage in illegal transactions [as opposed to abstract advocacy of illegality] are categorically excluded from First Amendment protection,” even “when the offeror is mistaken about the factual predicate of his offer,” such as when the child pornography that one offers to buy or sell does not exist or is constitutionally protected. Id. at 1841, 1842, 1843.

¹⁶ A federal court of appeals upheld a conviction under § 2252A(a)(5)(B), finding that Congress has “the power to proscribe purely intrastate possession of pornography, regardless of whether the pornography had traversed interstate over the Internet.” United States v. Sullivan, 451 F.3d 884 (D.C. Cir. 2006).

¹⁷ These circumstances are the same as those applicable to knowing possession of child pornography under 18 U.S.C. § 2252(a)(4), and are spelled out above in the third paragraph under “Section 2252.”

¹⁸ P.L. 105-314, § 203(b), changed “3 or more images” to “an image.” Section 2252(a)(4), by contrast, outlaws knowing possession of “1 or more books,” etc.; see note 9, supra.

Section 2252A(d) allows the same affirmative defense as § 2252(c) to charges of knowing possession (i.e., to charges of violating § 2252A(a)(5)). In addition, the PROTECT Act amended § 2252A(c) to allow an affirmative defense to a charge of violating § 2252A(a)(1), (2), (3)(A), (4), or (5), that the material was produced using actual persons, each of whom was an adult; or the material was produced without using an actual minor. The affirmative defense is not available to a charge of violating § 2252A(a)(3)(B), or to prosecutions that involve child pornography under § 2256(8)(C), which is the portion of the definition of “child pornography” that covers images that were modified to make it appear that an identifiable minor is engaging in sexually explicit conduct.¹⁹ This portion was not struck down by Ashcroft and was not amended by the PROTECT Act.

Section 2252A(f), as added by § 510 of the PROTECT Act, authorizes civil actions by persons aggrieved by a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 2252A(a) or (b), or § 1466A.

Section 2252B

Misleading domain names on the Internet. Although this section, which was created by § 521 of the PROTECT Act, was placed in the child pornography statute, it concerns obscenity and “harmful to minors” material, and not child pornography, except to the extent that obscenity or “harmful to minors” material may also be child pornography. It makes it a crime knowingly to use a misleading domain name on the Internet with the intent to deceive a person into viewing material that is obscene, or with the intent to deceive a minor into viewing material that is “harmful to minors.” It defines “harmful to minors” so as to parallel the Miller test for obscenity, as applied to minors.

Section 2252C

Misleading words or digital images on the Internet. This provision, which was enacted as P.L. 109-248 (2006), § 703, does not concern child pornography, except to the extent that it falls within the categories that the provision does cover, namely obscenity and material that is “harmful to minors.” We note it here because it is codified among the child pornography statutes. It makes it a crime to knowingly embed words or digital images into the source code of a website with the intent to deceive a person into viewing material that constitutes obscenity, or with the intent to deceive a minor into viewing material that is “harmful to minors.” It defines “harmful to minors” as defines in section 2252B.

Section 2253

Criminal forfeiture. This section provides for criminal forfeiture in child pornography cases. Specifically, it provides that a person convicted of violating 18 U.S.C. §§ 2251, 2251A, 2252, 2252A, or 2260, shall forfeit to the United States (1) the child pornography involved in the violation, (2) property, real or personal, constituting or traceable to gross profits or other proceeds obtained from the offense, and (3) property, real or personal, used or intended to be used to commit or to promote the commission of the offense.²⁰ P.L. 109-248 (2006), § 505(c), repealed

¹⁹ The conference report explains that the affirmative defense “does not apply to the pandering provisions [§ 2252A(a)(3)(B)] or the morphing [§ 2256(8)(C)] provisions.” H.Rept. 108-66, 108th Cong., 1st Sess. (2003) at 61.

²⁰ P.L. 105-314, § 602, added the reference in § 2253 to §§ 2252A and 2260.

subsections (b) through (o) of section 2253 and made “[s]ection 413 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 853), with the exception of subsections (a) and (d),” applicable to the criminal forfeiture of property pursuant to section 2253.

Section 2254

Civil forfeiture. This section was amended by P.L. 109-248 (2006), § 505(d), to provide, in full: “Any property subject to forfeiture pursuant to section 2253 may be forfeited to the United States in a civil case in accordance with the procedures set forth in chapter 46 [18 U.S.C. §§ 981-986].”

Section 2255

Civil remedy for personal injuries. This section provides that a minor who suffers personal injury as the result of a violation of various laws, including §§ 2251, 2251A, 2252, 2252A, and 2260, may bring a civil action for actual damages (which shall be deemed to be at least $50,000) plus the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney’s fee.²¹

Section 2256

Definitions for chapter. This section defines terms used in 18 U.S.C. §§ 2251-2260. As amended by § 502 of the PROTECT Act, P.L. 108-21 (2003), it defines “sexually explicit conduct” (conduct in which one may not depict minors engaging) as “actual or simulated”—

- (i) sexual intercourse, including genital-genital, oral-genital, anal-genital, or oral-anal, whether between persons of the same or opposite sex;
- (ii) bestiality;
- (iii) masturbation;
- (iv) sadistic or masochistic abuse; or
- (v) lascivious exhibition of the genitals or pubic area of any person.

The PROTECT Act provided a separate definition of “sexually explicit conduct” for purposes of its use in part of the definition of “child pornography”; we discuss this under “PROTECT Act,” below.

Paragraph (v) (formerly paragraph (E)) was supplemented by § 2252 note, set forth in the discussion of the Knox case, above, which indicates that “lascivious exhibition” is not limited to nudity.

The Child Pornography Protection Act of 1996 (CPPA), P.L. 104-208, 110 Stat. 3009-26, added a definition of “child pornography” to § 2256. The term, which is used in 18 U.S.C. § 2252A, includes visual depictions that do not portray an actual child. The definition was struck down in part by the Supreme Court in Ashcroft v. Free Speech Coalition, 535 U.S. 234 (2002), and then amended by the PROTECT Act, P.L. 108-21 (2003). In order to explain Ashcroft, we will first discuss the CPPA definition of “child pornography,” before it was amended by the PROTECT Act. This definition provided:

²¹ P.L. 105-314, § 605, added the reference in § 2255 to §§ 2251A, 2252A, and 2260.

“child pornography” means any visual depiction, including any photograph, film, video, picture, or computer or computer-generated image or picture, whether made or produced by electronic, mechanical, or other means, of sexually explicit conduct, where—

(A) the production of such visual depiction involves the use of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct;

(B) such visual depiction is, or appears to be, of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct;

(C) such visual depiction has been created, adapted, or modified to appear that an identifiable minor is engaging in sexually explicit conduct; or

(D) such visual depiction is advertised, promoted, presented, described, or distributed in such a manner that conveys the impression that the material is or contains a visual depiction of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct.

The CPPA provided an affirmative defense (not applicable to charges of violating the knowing possession provision, § 2252A(a)(5)) that the alleged child pornography was produced using only adults, and that “the defendant did not advertise, promote, present, describe, or distribute the material in such a manner as to convey the impression that it is or contains a visual depiction of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct.” 18 U.S.C. § 2252A(c).²² For a defendant charged only with knowing possession of child pornography, there is, as noted above under “Section 2252A,” and unchanged by the PROTECT Act, an affirmative defense that the defendant (1) possessed fewer than three images of child pornography, and (2) promptly and in good faith destroyed or reported the images to a law enforcement agency. 18 U.S.C. § 2252A(d).

Ashcroft v. Free Speech Coalition

In Ashcroft v. Free Speech Coalition, 535 U.S. 234 (2002), the Supreme Court struck down paragraphs (B) and (D) of the definition of “child pornography” quoted above. Paragraphs (A), which covers images of actual children engaged in sexually explicit conduct, and paragraph (C), which covers images of actual children “morphed” to make it appear as if the children are engaged in sexually explicit conduct, were not in issue. Paragraphs (B) and (D), by contrast, cover pornography that was produced without the use of actual children.

In Ashcroft, the Supreme Court observed that statutes that prohibit child pornography that use real children are constitutional because they target “[t]he production of the work, not its content.” 535 U.S. at 249; see also id. at 242. The CPPA, by contrast, targeted the content, not the means of production. “Virtual child pornography is not ‘intrinsically related’ to the sexual abuse of children, as were the materials in Ferber.” Id. at 250; see also id. at 249.

²² This affirmative defense, as amended by the PROTECT Act, is summarized in the penultimate paragraph of the discussion of “Section 2252,” above. The amended version, by permitting defendants to prove that no person used in producing the material was a minor (instead of only that each person used was an adult), makes the affirmative defense available to defendants charged with producing computer-generated child pornography.

The government's rationales for the CPPA included that "[p]edophiles might use the materials to encourage children to participate in sexual activity" and might "whet their own sexual appetites" with it, "thereby increasing ... the sexual abuse and exploitation of actual children." Id. at 241. The Court found these rationales inadequate because "[t]he evil in question depends upon the actor's unlawful conduct, conduct defined as criminal quite apart from any link to the speech in question.... The government 'cannot constitutionally premise legislation on the desirability of controlling a person's private thoughts.... The government may not prohibit speech because it increases the chance an unlawful act will be committed 'at some indefinite future time.' ... Without a significantly stronger, more direct connection, the Government may not prohibit speech on the ground that it may encourage pedophiles to engage in illegal conduct." Id. at 253-254.

The government also argued that the existence of "virtual" child pornography "can make it harder to prosecute pornographers who do use real minors," because, "[a]s imaging technology improves..., it becomes more difficult to prove that a particular picture was produced using actual children." Id. at 242. "This analysis," the Court found, "turns the First Amendment upside down. The Government may not suppress lawful speech as a means to suppress unlawful speech.... '[T]he possible harm to society in permitting some unprotected speech to go unpunished is outweighed by the possibility that protected speech of others may be muted....'" Id. at 255.

The Court also noted that, because child pornography, unlike obscenity, may include material with serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value, it includes "[a]ny depiction of sexually explicit activity, no matter how it is presented.... The CPPA [therefore] applies to a picture in a psychology manual, as well as a movie depicting the horrors of sexual abuse.... [T]eenage sexual activity and the sexual abuse of children ... have inspired countless literary works." Id. at 247. The Court then noted that the CPPA would make it a crime to film Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet in a manner that made it appear that the teenage lovers were engaging in sexually explicit conduct.

The majority opinion in Ashcroft was written by Justice Kennedy and joined by Justices Stevens, Souter, Ginsberg, and Breyer, with Justice Thomas concurring. Justice O'Connor concurred insofar as the decision struck down the prohibition of child pornography created with adults that look like children, but dissented insofar as it struck down the ban on virtual child pornography. Justices Rehnquist wrote a dissenting opinion joined by Justice Scalia, arguing that the CPPA should be construed to apply only to "computer-generated images that are virtually indistinguishable from real children engaged in sexually explicit conduct," and upheld as such. Id. at 268.

PROTECT Act

The PROTECT Act, P.L. 108-21 (2003), amended the definition of "child pornography" to provide:

"child pornography" means any visual depiction, including any photograph, film, video, picture, or computer or computer-generated image or picture, whether made or produced by electronic, mechanical, or other means, of sexually explicit conduct, where—

(A) the production of such visual depiction involves the use of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct;

(B) such visual depiction is a digital image, computer image, or computer-generated image that is, or is indistinguishable from, that of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct; or

(C) such visual depiction has been created, adapted, or modified to appear that an identifiable minor is engaging in sexually explicit conduct.

The PROTECT Act defines “sexually explicit conduct,” for purposes of (B), as:

- (i) graphic sexual intercourse, including genital-genital, oral-genital, anal-genital, or oral-anal, whether between persons of the same or opposite sex, or lascivious simulated sexual intercourse where the genitals, breast or pubic area of any person is exhibited;
- (ii) graphic or lascivious simulated; (I) bestiality; (II) masturbation; or (III) sadistic or masochistic abuse; or
- (iii) graphic or simulated lascivious exhibition of the genitals or pubic area of any person.²³

The most significant change in the definition of “child pornography,” from the CPPA to the PROTECT Act, as the term applies to material produced without the use of an actual minor, is that, instead of including any visual depiction that “is, or appears to be, of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct,” it now includes only “a digital image, computer image, or computer-generated image that is, or is indistinguishable from, that of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct.” The PROTECT Act defines “indistinguishable” to mean “virtually indistinguishable,” and not to apply to “drawings, cartoons, sculptures, or paintings.”²⁴

Nevertheless, the inclusion of “a digital image, computer image, or computer-generated image that is, or is indistinguishable from, that of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct” is apparently unconstitutional under Ashcroft, unless the PROTECT Act’s expanded affirmative defense can save it.²⁵ But whether it can seems questionable, because a defendant who “is not the producer of the work ... may have no way of establishing the identity, or even the existence, of the actors.... The statute, moreover, applies to work created before 1996, and the producers themselves may not have preserved the records necessary to meet the burden of proof.”²⁶ These aspects of the CPPA, which the Court in Ashcroft called “serious constitutional difficulties,” were not changed by the PROTECT Act.²⁷ The Court in Ashcroft did “not decide, however, whether the Government could impose this burden [of proving that his speech is not unlawful] on a speaker.”²⁸

Section 504 of the PROTECT Act created 18 U.S.C. § 1466A,²⁹ which makes it a crime knowingly to produce, distribute, receive, or possess, with or without intent to distribute, “a visual depiction of any kind, including a drawing, cartoon, sculpture, or painting,” that depicts a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct and is obscene or lacks serious literary, artistic,

²³ The definition of “sexually explicit conduct” for purposes of (A) in the definition of “child pornography,” and for other provisions of 18 U.S.C. §§ 2251-2260, is quoted at the beginning of the discussion of “Section 2256,” above.

²⁴ 18 U.S.C. § 2256(11), as added by § 502(c) of the PROTECT Act.

²⁵ See note 22, supra.

²⁶ Ashcroft, 535 U.S. at 255-256.

²⁷ Id. at 255. In United States v. Salcido, 506 F.3d 729, 733 (9th Cir. 2007) (quoted in Justice Souter’s dissent in United States v. Williams, supra, note 15, 128 S. Ct. at 1850), the court of appeals wrote, “the government has the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the images were of actual children, not computer-generated images.”

²⁸ Id. at 256. For further discussion of this issue, see CRS Report RL31744, Child Pornography Produced Without an Actual Child: Constitutionality of 108th Congress Legislation, by (name redacted), pp. 12-13.

²⁹ This provision thus is not part of § 2256, and is included in the discussion of § 2256 solely for convenience.

political, or scientific value. This provision applies whether an actual minor is used or not, but covers only depictions of minors engaged in specified sexual activities, and not in lascivious exhibition of the genitals or pubic area. Section 1466A allows the same affirmative defense to charges of knowing possession (without intent to distribute) that appears in 18 U.S.C. §§ 2252(c) and 2252A(d). It does not, however, allow the same affirmative defense that appears in § 2252A(c), that the material was produced using actual persons, each of whom was an adult; or the material was produced without using an actual minor. To the extent that § 1466A applies to non-obscene material produced without the use of an actual minor, it would apparently be unconstitutional under Ashcroft.

Section 2257

Recordkeeping requirements. This section was enacted in 1988, declared unconstitutional in 1989,³⁰ amended in 1990 in order to restore it, amended again in 1994, 2003, and 2006 (by P.L. 109-248, § 502). It currently provides:

Whoever produces any book, magazine, periodical, film, videotape, digital image, digitally- or computer-manipulated image of an actual human being, picture, or other matter which—

(1) contains any visual depiction made after November 1, 1990 [prior to the 1990 amendment this date was February 6, 1978] of actual sexually explicit conduct; and

(2) is produced in whole or in part with materials which have been mailed or shipped in interstate or foreign commerce, or is shipped or transported or is intended for shipment or transportation in interstate or foreign commerce;

shall create and maintain individually identifiable records pertaining to every performer portrayed in such visual depiction.³¹

Section 2257 also provides that these records must include the performer's name and date of birth, and must be made available to the Attorney General for inspection at all reasonable times. They may not be used directly or indirectly as evidence against any person with respect to any violation of law.

³⁰ American Library Association v. Thornburgh, 713 F. Supp. 469 (D.D.C. 1989). In 1992, the D.C. Circuit found that the 1990 amendments “mooted the question whether the recordkeeping provisions of the Child Protection Act are constitutional,” and consequently vacated the district court’s holding that they were unconstitutional. American Library Association v. Barr, 956 F.2d 1178, 1186 (D.C. Cir. 1992). Later the same year, a federal district court declared the new recordkeeping requirements unconstitutional and enjoined the government from enforcing the act “with respect to producers and distributors of any material who have satisfied themselves after due diligence that such material does not contain depictions of people under 18 years of age.” However, in 1994, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia reversed, finding the statute constitutional. American Library Association v. Barr, 794 F. Supp. 412, 420 (D.D.C. 1992), rev’d sub nom. American Library Association v. Reno, 33 F.3d 78 (D.C. Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1158 (1995). In 1999, another federal appeals court denied a preliminary injunction against enforcement of § 2257, finding that the plaintiff had not demonstrated a substantial likelihood of success on its First Amendment claim. Connection Distributing Co. v. Reno, 154 F.3d 281 (6th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1087 (1999).

³¹ Revised Department of Justice regulations under § 2257 took effect June 23, 2005. 70 Fed. Reg. 29607 (May 24, 2005), 28 C.F.R. Part 75.

Section 2257A

Record keeping requirements for simulated sexual conduct. This section, added in 2006 by P.L. 109-248, § 503, is essentially the same as § 2257 except that it applies only to “visual depictions of simulated sexual conduct.”

Section 2258

Failure to report child abuse. This section, added in 1990 by P.L. 101-647, § 226(g)(1), provides that a person who, while engaged in a specified professional capacity or activity on federal land or in a federally operated or contracted facility, learns of facts that give him or her reason to suspect child abuse, and fails to make a timely report of it, shall be guilty of a Class B misdemeanor. The specified professionals are those described in 42 U.S.C. § 13031(b), and include, among others, medical personnel, social workers, teachers, law enforcement personnel, foster parents, and commercial film and photo processors.³²

Section 2259

Mandatory restitution. This section requires courts to order a defendant convicted of a federal child pornography crime to pay to the victim the full amount of the victim’s losses.

Section 2260

Production of sexually explicit depictions of a minor for importation into the United States.³³ This section, added in 1994 by P.L. 103-322, § 160001, makes it a crime for a person, outside the United States, to employ, use, persuade, induce, entice, or coerce any minor to engage in, or transport a minor with the intent that the minor engage in, any sexually explicit conduct, for the purpose of producing a visual depiction of such conduct for importation into the United States or into waters within twelve miles of the coast of the United States. It also makes it a crime for a person, outside the United States, knowingly to receive, transport, ship, distribute, sell, or possess with the intent to transport, ship, sell, or distribute any visual depiction of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct (if the product involved the use of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct), intending that the visual depiction be imported into the United States or into waters within twelve miles of the coast of the United States.

B. Children’s Internet Protection Act (CIPA)³⁴

The Children’s Internet Protection Act (CIPA), P.L. 106-554 (2000), 114 Stat. 2763A-335, amended three federal statutes to provide that a school or library may not use funds it receives under these statutes to purchase computers used to access the Internet, or to pay the direct costs of accessing the Internet, and may not receive universal service discounts (other than for telecommunications services), unless the school or library enforces a policy “that includes the operation of a technology protection measure” that blocks or filters minors’ Internet access to visual depictions that are obscene, child pornography, or harmful to minors; and that blocks or filters adults’ Internet access to visual depictions that are obscene or child pornography.³⁵

³² Another statute, discussed in the final section of this report, requires that providers of electronic communication services who learn of a violation of a federal child pornography statute report such information to the Cyber Tip Line at the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, which shall forward the information to law enforcement agencies designated by the Attorney General. 42 U.S.C. § 13032.

³³ When it was enacted, this section was numbered “2258,” despite there already being a section with that number, but was renumbered “2260” by P.L. 104-294, § 601(i)(1).

³⁴ P.L. 106-554 incorporated H.R. 5666, 106th Congress, Title 17 of which is CIPA.

The sections of CIPA (1711 and 1712) that require schools and libraries to block or filter if they use federal funds for computers or for Internet access, provide that the blocking or filtering technology may be disabled “to enable access for bona fide research or other lawful purpose.” The section of CIPA (1721) that requires schools and libraries to block or filter if they receive universal service discounts, provides that the blocking or filtering technology may be disabled “during use by an adult, to enable access for bona fide research or other lawful purpose.”

Sections 1711, 1712, and 1721 all contain identical definitions of “child pornography,” which they define to have the meaning given such term in 18 U.S.C. § 2256, which is discussed above.

In United States v. American Library Association, a three-judge federal district court unanimously declared CIPA unconstitutional and enjoined its enforcement insofar as it applies to libraries.³⁶ The government to appealed directly to the Supreme Court, which, on June 23, 2003, reversed the district court, finding CIPA constitutional.³⁷ The plurality opinion acknowledged “the tendency of filtering software to ‘overblock’—that is, to erroneously block access to constitutionally protected speech that falls outside the categories that software users intend to block.”³⁸ It found, however, that, “[a]ssuming that such erroneous blocking presents constitutional difficulties, any such concerns are dispelled by the ease with which patrons may have the filtering software disabled.”³⁹ The plurality also found that CIPA does not deny a benefit to libraries that do not agree to use filters; rather, the statute “simply insist[s] that public funds be spent for the purposes for which they were authorized.”⁴⁰

³⁵ Section 1711 amends Title III of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, 20 U.S.C. §§ 6801 et seq. Section 1712 amends section 224 of the Museum and Library Services Act, 20 U.S.C. § 9134, which is part of the Library Services and Technology Act (LSTA), which is Title II of the Museum and Library Services Act. Section 1721 amends section 254(h) of the Communications Act of 1934, 47 U.S.C. § 254(h), which establishes the “universal service discount,” or “E-rate,” for schools and libraries.

³⁶ 201 F. Supp. 2d 401 (E.D. Pa. 2002). The district court struck down § 1712(a)(2), which concerns LSTA funds, and § 1721(b) which concerns E-rate discounts for libraries. The provisions affecting schools were not challenged.

³⁷ 539 U.S. 194 (2003).

³⁸ Id. at 208. The three-judge court had found that “At least tens of thousands of pages of the indexable Web are overblocked by each of the filtering programs evaluated by experts in this case, even when considered against the filtering companies’ own category definitions. Many erroneously blocked pages contain content that is completely innocuous for both adults and minors, and that no rational person could conclude matches the filtering companies’ category definitions, such as ‘pornography’ or ‘sex.’” 201 F. Supp. 2d, at 449.

³⁹ Id. at 209.

⁴⁰ Id. at 211. A fuller analysis of the decision appears in CRS Report 95-804, Obscenity and Indecency: Constitutional Principles and Federal Statutes, by (name redacted).

C. Federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO)

In 1988, the Federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), was amended by P.L. 100-690, § 7514, to add the child pornography crimes specified in 18 U.S.C. §§ 2251, 2251A, 2252 to the definition of “racketeering activity” in 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1)(B). In 1994, RICO was amended by P.L. 103-322, § 160001, to add the crimes specified in 18 U.S.C. § 2260 to the definition. RICO makes it a crime for any person employed by or associated with any “enterprise” engaged in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce to participate in the affairs of the enterprise “through a pattern of racketeering activity.” 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c). A “pattern of racketeering activity” means at least two acts of racketeering activity within ten years (excluding any period of imprisonment). 18 U.S.C. § 1961(5). Thus, if a person engages in two such activities, which may include the child pornography offenses specified, he is subject to prosecution under RICO in addition to, or instead of, prosecution for the particular activities.

RICO also provides for criminal forfeiture (18 U.S.C. § 1963). In Fort Wayne Books, Inc. v. Indiana, 489 U.S. 46 (1989), the Supreme Court held that pretrial seizure, under the Indiana RICO statute, of books or other expressive materials, was unconstitutional. Although probable cause to believe that a person has committed a crime is sufficient to arrest him, “probable cause to believe that there are valid grounds for seizure is insufficient to interrupt the sale of presumptively protected books and films.” Id. at 66. This presumption of First Amendment protection “is not rebutted until the claimed justification for seizing books or other publications is properly established in an adversary proceeding.” Id. at 67. The federal RICO statute, in any event, does not provide for pretrial seizure.⁴¹

In Fort Wayne Books, the Court did, however, uphold the constitutionality of including obscenity violations among the predicate offenses under a RICO statute. The Court rejected the argument “that the potential punishments available under the RICO law are so severe that the statute lacks a ‘necessary sensitivity to first amendment rights.’” Id. at 57. Further, the Court held that such obscenity violations need not be “affirmed convictions on successive dates ... in the same jurisdiction as that where the RICO charge is brought.” Id. at 61.

The fact that the violations need not be affirmed convictions means that the obscenity violations may be proved as part of the RICO prosecution; no “warning shot” in the form of a prior conviction for obscenity is required. “As long as the standard of proof is the proper one with respect to all the elements of the RICO allegation—including proof, beyond a reasonable doubt, of the requisite number of constitutionally proscribable predicate acts—all of the relevant constitutional requirements have been met.” Id.

There appears to be no reason why the principles the Court stated in Fort Wayne Books with respect to obscenity violations under RICO would not apply equally to child pornography violations.

In Alexander v. United States, 509 U.S. 544 (1993), the Supreme Court addressed a question it had left open in Fort Wayne Books: whether there are First Amendment limitations to RICO forfeitures of assets that consist of expressive materials that are otherwise protected by the First ⁴¹ See Fort Wayne Books, Inc. v. Indiana, 489 U.S. at 67 n.13.

Amendment. The defendant in the case had been found guilty of selling four magazines and three videotapes that were obscene, and, on that basis, had been convicted under RICO. He was sentenced to six years in prison, fined $100,000, and ordered to pay the cost of prosecution, incarceration, and supervised release. He was also ordered to forfeit all his wholesale and retail businesses, including more than a dozen stores and theaters dealing in sexually explicit material, all the assets of these businesses (i.e., expressive materials, whether or not obscene), and almost $9 million. The government chose to destroy, rather than sell, the expressive material.

The Supreme Court rejected the argument that the forfeiture of expressive materials constitutes prior restraint, as the forfeiture order “does not forbid petitioner from engaging in any expressive activities in the future, nor does it require him to obtain prior approval for any expressive activities.” Id. at 550-551 (emphasis in original). Consequently, the Court analyzed the forfeiture “under normal First Amendment standards,” and could see no reason why, “if incarceration for six years and a fine of $100,000 are permissible forms of punishment under the RICO statute, the challenged forfeiture of certain assets directly related to petitioner’s racketeering activity is not.... [T]he First Amendment does not prohibit either stringent criminal sanctions for obscenity offenses or forfeiture of expressive materials as punishment for criminal conduct.” Id. at 554.

The Court did, however, remand the case to the court of appeals to decide whether the forfeiture constituted an “excessive fine” under the Eighth Amendment. The same day, in Austin v. United States, 509 U.S. 602 (1993), the Court held that the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment applies to forfeitures of property imposed by criminal statutes.

D. Money Laundering

The federal money laundering statute makes it a crime to, among other things, knowingly engage or attempt to engage in a monetary transaction in criminally derived property of a value greater than $10,000, if such property is derived from “specified unlawful activity.”⁴² The Enhancing the Effective Prosecution of Child Pornography Act of 2007 (Title II of P.L. 110-358) amended the money laundering statute’s definition of “specified unlawful activity” to include an offense under “section 2252A (relating to child pornography) where the child pornography contains a visual depiction of an actual minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct, [or] section 2260 (production of certain child pornography for importation into the United States).”

Recently Enacted Federal Legislation

The Sex Crimes Against Children Prevention Act of 1995, P.L. 104-71, became law on December 23, 1995. It requires the United States Sentencing Commission to amend the sentencing guidelines to increase the penalties for offenses under 18 U.S.C. §§ 2251 and 2252 (which are discussed in this report), to increase the penalties under particular subdivisions of those sections if a computer was used to commit the crime, and to increase the penalty under 18 U.S.C. § 2423 (which prohibits transporting a minor in interstate or foreign commerce for the purpose of prostitution, and which is not discussed in this report). It would also require the Sentencing ⁴² 18 U.S.C. § 1957(a). See CRS Report RS22401, Money Laundering: An Abridged Overview of 18 U.S.C. 1956 and Related Federal Criminal Law, by (name redacted).

Commission, within 180 days after enactment of the bill, to submit a report to Congress concerning offenses involving child pornography and other sex offenses against children.

Section 508 of the Communications Decency Act of 1996 (CDA), which is Title V of the Telecommunications Act of 1996, P.L. 104-104, amended 18 U.S.C. § 2422, which imposes up to five years' imprisonment on anyone who "knowingly persuades, induces, entices, or coerces any individual to travel in interstate or foreign commerce ... to engage in prostitution or in any sexual activity for which any person can be charged with a criminal offense" (and which is not discussed in this report). The 1996 amendment added a subsection imposing up to ten years' imprisonment on anyone who, "using any facility or means of interstate or foreign commerce ... knowingly persuades, induces, entices, or coerces any individual who has not attained the age of 18 years to engage in prostitution or any sexual act for which any person may be criminally prosecuted...."

The Child Pornography Prevention Act of 1996 (CPPA), P.L. 104-208, 110 Stat. 3009-26, added 18 U.S.C. § 2252A and added a definition of "child pornography" to 18 U.S.C. § 2256. These provisions banned child pornography even when no actual minor was used to produce it. In Ashcroft v. Free Speech Coalition, 535 U.S. 234 (2002), the Supreme Court declared this provision unconstitutional to the extent that it prohibited pictures that were not produced with actual minors.

The Protection of Children From Sexual Predators Act of 1998, P.L. 105-314, included some sections relating to child pornography. These amended 18 U.S.C. §§ 2252, 2252A, 2253, 2254, and 2255; these amendments are noted in this report in the summaries of these sections. In addition, P.L. 105-314, § 604, added § 227 to the Victims of Child Abuse Act of 1990, 42 U.S.C. §§ 13001 et seq. Section 227(b)(1), 42 U.S.C. § 13032(b)(1), provides:

Whoever, while engaged in providing an electronic communication service [as defined at 18 U.S.C. § 2510] or a remote computing service [as defined at 18 U.S.C. § 2711] to the public, through a facility or means of interstate or foreign commerce, obtains knowledge of facts or circumstances from which a violation of section 2251, 2251A, 2252, 2252A, or 2260 of title 18, United States Code, involving child pornography (as defined in section 2256 of that title), or a violation of section 1466A of that title, is apparent, shall, as soon as reasonably possible, make a report of such facts or circumstances to the Cyber Tip Line at the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, which shall forward that report to a law enforcement agency or agencies designated by the Attorney General.

The Attorney General's designations are published at 28 C.F.R. Part 81.

The Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act of 2006, P.L. 109-248, § 130 (2006) added 42 U.S.C. § 13032(g), which grants the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, as well as its directors, officers, employees, or agents, immunity from civil or criminal liability arising from the performance of Cyber Tip Line responsibilities, except when the Center or any of the above individuals engages in intentional misconduct or reckless disregard to a substantial risk of causing injury without legal justification. Another provision of the Adam Walsh Act is noted below.

The Children's Internet Protection Act (CIPA), P.L. 106-554 (2000), amended three federal statutes to provide that a school or library may not use funds it receives under these statutes to purchase computers used to access the Internet, or to pay the direct costs of accessing the Internet, and may not receive universal service discounts, unless the school or library enforces a policy to block or filter minors' Internet access to visual depictions that are obscene, child pornography, or harmful to minors; and enforces a policy to block or filter adults' Internet access to visual depictions that are obscene or child pornography. Filters may be disabled, however, "for bona fide research or other lawful purpose." In 2003, the Supreme Court held CIPA constitutional.

The Prosecutorial Remedies and Other Tools to end the Exploitation of Children Today Act of 2003, or the PROTECT Act, P.L. 108-21, amended 18 U.S.C. § 2252A to make prohibit any "digital image, computer image, or computer-generated image that is, or is indistinguishable from, that of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct," even if no actual minor was used to produce the image. It also amended the affirmative defense in 18 U.S.C. § 2252A to prosecutions for child pornography crimes, and amended the definitions in 18 U.S.C. § 2256 of "sexually explicit conduct" and "child pornography." The PROTECT Act also created 18 U.S.C. § 1466A, which makes it a crime knowingly to produce, distribute, receive, or possess, with or without intent to distribute, "a visual depiction of any kind, including a drawing, cartoon, sculpture, or painting," that depicts a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct and is obscene or lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value.

The Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act of 2006, P.L. 109-248, included several child pornography provisions, including section 502, which amended 18 U.S.C. § 2257, which requires by producers of material that depicts actual sexually explicit conduct to keep records of every performers' name and date of birth; and section 503, which enacted 18 U.S.C. § 2257A, which requires essentially the same thing with respect to simulated sexual conduct.

The Effective Child Pornography Prosecution Act of 2007 (Title I of P.L. 110-358) and the Enhancing the Effective Prosecution of Child Pornography Act of 2007 (Title II of P.L. 110-358) amended 18 U.S.C. §§ 2251, 2251A, 2252, and 2252A to apply to violations "affecting interstate or foreign commerce" even if they are not in interstate commerce, to apply to mailing, transporting, or shipping child pornography "using any means or facility of interstate or foreign commerce," and to apply not only to knowingly possessing child pornography but to knowingly accessing it with intent to view it. Title II also amended the money laundering provision, discussed above.

Author Contact Information

(name redacted)
Legislative Attorney
[redacted]@crs.loc.gov, 7-....

EveryCRSReport.com

The Congressional Research Service (CRS) is a federal legislative branch agency, housed inside the Library of Congress, charged with providing the United States Congress non-partisan advice on issues that may come before Congress.

EveryCRSReport.com republishes CRS reports that are available to all Congressional staff. The reports are not classified, and Members of Congress routinely make individual reports available to the public.

Prior to our republication, we redacted names, phone numbers and email addresses of analysts who produced the reports. We also added this page to the report. We have not intentionally made any other changes to any report published on EveryCRSReport.com.

CRS reports, as a work of the United States government, are not subject to copyright protection in the United States. Any CRS report may be reproduced and distributed in its entirety without permission from CRS. However, as a CRS report may include copyrighted images or material from a third party, you may need to obtain permission of the copyright holder if you wish to copy or otherwise use copyrighted material.

Information in a CRS report should not be relied upon for purposes other than public understanding of information that has been provided by CRS to members of Congress in connection with CRS' institutional role.

EveryCRSReport.com is not a government website and is not affiliated with CRS. We do not claim copyright on any CRS report we have republished.