

Preexisting Exclusion Provisions for Children and Dependent Coverage under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA)

Hinda Chaikind

Specialist in Health Care Financing

Bernadette Fernandez

Analyst in Health Care Financing

May 4, 2010

Congressional Research Service

7-5700

www.crs.gov

R41220

CRS Report for Congress

Prepared for Members and Committees of Congress

Summary

Under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (P.L. 111-148, PPACA, as amended by the Health Care and Education Act, P.L. 111-152), a number of provisions directly affect access to health insurance coverage. Hereafter, PPACA will refer to PPACA as amended by the reconciliation act. This report provides a description of two of the provisions in PPACA that are targeted toward younger individuals, for plan years beginning six months after date of enactment (i.e., the plan year beginning after September 23, 2010). PPACA does not allow preexisting condition exclusions for children under age 19, and the law also requires plans to continue to make dependent coverage available up to age 26.

Contents

No Preexisting Exclusion for Children up to Age 19	1
Dependent Coverage	3

Tables

Table 1. Medically Underwritten Policies in the Individual Market, 2008	2
---	---

Contacts

Author Contact Information	5
----------------------------------	---

Under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (P.L. 111-148, PPACA, as amended by the Health Care and Education Act, P.L. 111-152), a number of provisions directly affect access to health insurance coverage.¹ Most of the insurance reforms in PPACA amend Title XXVII of the Public Health Service Act (PHSA, 42 U.S.C. 300gg et seq.). Title XXVII includes requirements on health insurance coverage for both the group and nongroup markets, enforcement applicable to such requirements, relevant definitions, and other provisions.

This report provides a description of two of the provisions in PPACA that are targeted toward younger individuals, for plan years beginning six months after date of enactment (i.e., the plan year beginning after September 23, 2010).² PPACA does not allow preexisting condition exclusions for children under age 19, and the law also requires plans to continue to make dependent coverage available under age 26.

This report includes a description of the law and relevant information about the implementation of these two provisions.

No Preexisting Exclusion for Children up to Age 19

PPACA will prohibit preexisting health condition exclusions for children under 19, effective for plan years beginning after September 23, 2010.³ This provision applies to all grandfathered⁴ and new group plans (including self-insured plans)⁵ and all new individual plans. In other words, such plans may not exclude benefits based on health conditions for qualifying children.⁶

A strict interpretation of the legislative language would appear to separate the guarantee for the issuance of a health insurance policy from the prohibition against coverage exclusions for preexisting conditions once a policy has been issued.⁷ Such an interpretation would mean that children could be denied the offer of coverage altogether until 2014, but that if they are offered coverage,⁸ they would have access to all covered benefits to treat their health conditions for plan years beginning after September 23, 2010.

¹ PPACA will refer to PPACA as amended by the reconciliation act.

² As an example, if a plan year begins on January 1 of each year, as many plans do, these provisions would take effect on January 1, 2011.

³ §1201 of P.L. 111-148 (new PHSA §2704), as amended by §2301 of P.L. 111-152.

⁴ Grandfathered plans are defined as those individual and group plans that an individual or family was enrolled in on the date of enactment. A plan that provides group coverage on the date of enactment may provide for the enrolling of new employees (and their families) in such plan. For additional information about grandfathered plans, see CRS Report R41166, Grandfathered Health Plans Under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA), by Bernadette Fernandez.

⁵ The definitions for group health plans and health insurance coverage refer to definitions in the Public Health Service Act (PHSA). Under PHSA, group health plans include self-insured plans. For additional information about self-insured plans, see CRS Report R41069, Self-Insured Health Insurance Coverage, by Bernadette Fernandez.

⁶ Beginning January 1, 2014, the provision would be expanded to include those individuals aged 19 and older.

⁷ PPACA first addresses guaranteed issue in 2014. For plan years beginning after January 1, 2014, PPACA will require insurance carriers that offer new health insurance policies in the group or individual market to accept any applicant for coverage who is willing to accept the terms of such coverage (guaranteed issue). Guaranteed issue generally does not define what benefits must be covered under the offered insurance policy, nor does it specify the premium charged.

⁸ This will apply in cases when a child receives dependent coverage on a parent's policy, or when a child is covered under her own policy in the individual market.

However, the law gives the Secretary of Health and Human Services (the Secretary) wide latitude with respect to implementation of the insurance reforms and other provisions. In multiple instances, the law specifies that the Secretary will promulgate regulations to implement various provisions affecting private health coverage. In addition, the inclusion of the insurance reforms under Title XXVII of PHSA indicates the intent for the Secretary to exercise broad rulemaking and enforcement authority. Finally, Secretary Sebelius has issued public statements indicating her intent to implement the preexisting condition provision in tandem with the guaranteed issue provision, with respect to children’s coverage. The Secretary, in a letter to the President of America’s Health Insurance Plans, stated that she will issue regulations to confirm that beginning in September, 2010:

- Children with pre-existing conditions may not be denied access to their parents’ health insurance plan;
- Insurance companies will no longer be allowed to insure a child, but exclude treatments for that child’s pre-existing condition.⁹

Analysis of existing surveys of the individual market may provide rough estimates of the size of the population that may be affected by this provision.¹⁰ According to one ongoing survey of the individual market,¹¹ almost 13% of medically underwritten applications for health insurance were denied in 2008, representing over 220,000 applicants. Of those applications for children (under age 18), nearly 5% were denied that year, equivalent to more than 20,000 applicants.

Moreover, of those individuals offered insurance, some applicants were offered policies that excluded coverage for certain conditions (“condition waiver”), and other applicants were offered policies with both a condition waiver and higher premium (see Table 1).

Table 1. Medically Underwritten Policies in the Individual Market, 2008
Offered Policies, Condition Waivers, and Higher Premiums

Applicants by Age Range	Medically Underwritten Policies Offered	Policies Offered with Condition Waiver	Policies Offered with Condition Waiver and Higher Premium
All non-elderly (under 65 years of age)
Number of applicants	1,540,127	92,914	23,569
Percentage	100%	6.0%	1.5%
Under 18 years of age
Number of applicants	408,990	10,948	7,408
Percentage	100%	2.7%	1.8%

Source: America’s Health Insurance Plans, “Individual Health Insurance 2009: A Comprehensive Survey of Premiums, Availability, and Benefits,” October 2009.

⁹ Kathleen Sebelius, Secretary of Health and Human Services, letter to Ms. Karen Ignagni, March 29, 2010, p. 1.

¹⁰ Precise estimates of the population that potentially could be affected by this provision are difficult to calculate given limitations of existing, publicly available data sources.

¹¹ America’s Health Insurance Plans (AHIP) conducted its latest survey of member companies offering insurance products in the individual market during the summer of 2009.

Given the Secretary's intention to apply the preexisting condition coverage requirements to both the issuance of insurance and scope of covered benefits for children, the provision will affect instances when insurance was denied altogether, and when insurance was offered but excluded coverage for certain health conditions. In addition, this data does not include those individuals who choose not to even apply for health insurance, because they assumed they would be rejected based on their health history.

Dependent Coverage

The requirement relating to coverage of adult children will also take effect for the plan years beginning after September 23, 2010.¹² The statute requires that if a plan provides for dependent coverage of children, the plan must continue to make such coverage available for an adult child until age 26.¹³

- Plans that offer dependent coverage must continue to make that offer available until the adult child turns 26 years of age. As an example, an adult child who is 26 years and 1 month old would no longer be required to be covered.
- Plans must make coverage available for both married and unmarried adult children under age 26, but not for the adult child's children.
- The requirement affects individuals enrolled in all group and individual health plans, including self-insured plans.

The statutes do not require plans to offer coverage, so that if a plan chooses not to provide dependent coverage, nothing in this statute would require them to do so. The age requirement affects only plans that choose to offer dependent coverage.

- Prior to 2014, for grandfathered group health plans, dependent coverage is not available to those adult children who can enroll in an eligible employer-sponsored health plan based on their employment.

Because the statute takes effect for plan years beginning six months after the date of enactment, there may be some adult children who were covered when PPACA was enacted, but who will age out of their parent's plan before the required effective date. However, several insurers have already indicated that they will continue to provide dependent coverage for these individuals even before such coverage is required. In addition, Secretary Sebelius issued a statement on April 19, 2010, recognizing those insurers who have already chosen to "bridge the gap between now and the fall when the law becomes effective."¹⁴ The Office of Personnel Management (OPM) has stated it cannot provide this gap coverage for enrollees of the Federal Employees Health Benefits

¹² §1001 of P.L. 111-148 (new PHSA §2714), as amended by §2301 of P.L. 111-152.

¹³ §1004(d) of P.L. 111-152 extended the exclusion from gross income of the parent to include dependent coverage for a child who has not attained age 27, as of the end of the taxable year. Prior to PPACA, the exclusion was allowed only up to age 23, so that dependent coverage for older children was considered taxable income to the employed parent.

¹⁴ See <http://www.hhs.gov/news/press/2010pres/04/20100419a.html>.

program (FEHBP), because the current law governing FEHBP specifically prohibits OPM from doing so.¹⁵

For those individuals who do lose coverage before the requirements are in place, the health insurance options for an adult child who ages out of a parent's policy remain unchanged from those available prior to the passage of PPACA. Children who age out of their parent's policy may be able to purchase health insurance through COBRA,¹⁶ which provides temporary access to health insurance for qualified individuals who lose coverage for certain conditions. One of the qualifying conditions for COBRA coverage is the end of dependent coverage. The child could also buy health insurance through the individual market.

The Secretary will also be responsible for promulgating the regulations to define "dependents," for the purpose of this provision.¹⁷ The federal requirements are a floor. That is, they provide a minimum requirement. States that already impose requirements beyond age 26 may continue to do so. For example, New Jersey requires dependent coverage to be available up to the age of 31, as long as the adult child is unmarried and has no dependents.¹⁸ To the extent that the state law is more restrictive than the federal law (e.g., New Jersey's requires that the individual not be married), the federal statute would apply, therefore covering the married adult child through the age of 26.

For 2008, about 30.7 %, or 8.8 million, young adults aged 19 to 25 (i.e., up to their 26th birthday) had no health insurance.¹⁹ Another 6.2% or 1.8 million, young adults in that cohort had private nongroup coverage. So while the potential "pool," at least in 2008, was 10.6 million individuals, it is difficult to estimate how this number might translate into covered lives as a result of the dependent coverage provision in PPACA. The potential effect is difficult to estimate because (1) some of these individuals may have had an offer of coverage through their employer that they did not accept, which would disqualify them from enrolling in their parent's policy, and (2) the parents of these individuals may not have had an offer of dependent coverage through their employer, or may be uninsured themselves.

¹⁵ See information on OPM's website, <http://www.opm.gov/insure/health/reform/index.asp>.

¹⁶ For more information on COBRA, see CRS Report R40142, Health Insurance Continuation Coverage Under COBRA, by Janet Kinzer and Meredith Peterson. For individuals covered by the Federal Employees Health Benefits program, the Temporary Continuation of Coverage (TCC) program provides coverage similar to COBRA.

¹⁷ Because §1001 of P.L. 111-148 of the statute requires plans to "continue to make such coverage available," it is unclear whether those adult children who have already aged out of their parent's plan could return to that plan. The regulations will clarify who is an applicable dependent; thus far the Secretary has held webinars and has issued a press release, dated April 19, 2010 (see footnote 14), that recognizes insurers who have chosen to "bridge the gap between now and the fall when the law becomes effective."

¹⁸ For a complete description of state law applying to dependent coverage, see <http://www.ncsl.org/default.aspx?tabid=14497>.

¹⁹ For more information, see CRS Report 96-891, Health Insurance Coverage: Characteristics of the Insured and Uninsured in 2008, by Chris L. Peterson.

Author Contact Information

Hinda Chaikind
Specialist in Health Care Financing
hchaikind@crs.loc.gov, 7-7569

Bernadette Fernandez
Analyst in Health Care Financing
bfernandez@crs.loc.gov, 7-0322