

Congressional Research Service

Informing the legislative debate since 1914

---

Privileged Business on the House Floor

name redacted

Specialist on Congress and the Legislative Process

January 23, 2017

Congressional Research Service

7-....

www.crs.gov

98-315

Privileged business relates to the order or priority of business before the House and is defined in House rules and precedents as business that has precedence over the regular order of business. As a consequence, it may supersede or interrupt other matters that might be called up or pending before the House. Members have a right to call up privileged business for consideration on the floor when the House is not engaged in considering some other matter. Privileged business consists of various kinds of bills, resolutions, and other matters.<sup>1</sup>

Clause 1 of House Rule XIV defines the daily order of business on the House floor. However, other House rules and precedents allow certain kinds of matters to interrupt this daily order of business. A matter that can interrupt the daily order of business is said to be privileged. In practice, the House never follows the daily order of business that Rule XIV defines. Instead, virtually all the legislative business that the House transacts on the floor each day—after the opening prayer, the approval of the Journal, and the Pledge of Allegiance—is conducted either by unanimous consent or as a privileged interruption of the daily order of business.

Various rules of the House give privilege to specific kinds of measures and matters. Most important is clause 5(a) of Rule XIII, which grants certain committees the “leave to report at any time” on certain kinds of bills and resolutions. Those bills and resolutions are privileged. Under this rule, privileged business includes:

- General appropriations bills, reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and continuing resolutions, reported by the same committee after September 15;
- Budget resolutions and reconciliation bills, reported by the Committee on the Budget;
- Amendments to the House’s rules and resolutions affecting the order of business (“special rules”), reported by the Committee on Rules; and
- Resolutions concerning the official conduct of Members and staff, reported by the Committee on Ethics.

Other kinds of legislative business derive their privilege from other House rules or from well-established precedents, such as the following:

- Resolutions making committee assignments,
- Questions of personal privilege or the privileges of the House, and
- Resolutions of inquiry (seeking documents or facts from the executive branch).

Among the privileged measures listed above, only general appropriations bills, continuing resolutions, and budget reconciliation bills are enacted into law. The others involve internal operations of Congress or the House. Privilege may also be based on the particular action contemplated or the stage of the legislative process, such as:

- Certain motions to send bills to conference,
- Conference reports,
- Senate amendments to which the House has disagreed, and
- Bills that the President has vetoed and returned to Congress.

The House can consider any one of these privileged matters at any time that the House is not acting on something else. In practice, though, the choice of the day and time for considering a privileged measure is made through discussions involving the majority party leadership and the committee chairman, usually in consultation with the committee's ranking minority member.

<sup>1</sup> For more information, see Wm. Holmes Brown, Charles W. Johnson, and John V. Sullivan, House Practice: A Guide to the Rules, Precedents, and Procedures of the House (Washington, DC: GPO, 2011), chapter 36, pp. 659-666.

In addition, some laws grant privilege to particular kinds of measures (typically in the form of a joint resolution) that Congress can pass, usually by using expedited procedures within a limited time period and usually for the purpose of disapproving some action that the President or an executive branch official plans to take or has taken. This kind of measure may be privileged even if the committee to which it was referred has not reported it.<sup>2</sup>

No other bills are privileged. Therefore, the chairman of a committee cannot simply rise on the floor and call up for consideration some other kind of bill that his or her committee has reported, because House rules do not empower the chairman (or any other Member) to interrupt the daily order of business for that purpose.

Instead, non-privileged bills are brought to the floor in one of three ways: by unanimous consent, under the terms of a special rule (which itself is privileged), or by one of several special procedures that are privileged orders of business on certain days as provided under House Rule XV. These procedures involve (1) motions to suspend the rules, (2) motions to discharge committees from further consideration of bills referred to them, (3) consideration of District of Columbia business, (4) the call of the Private Calendar for considering private bills, and (5) the call of the committees on Calendar Wednesday, when committees can call up non-privileged bills they have reported. In practice, the House considers almost all non-privileged bills by unanimous consent, pursuant to special rules, or under motions to suspend the rules. The alternative procedures are used infrequently.

Author Contact Information

(name redacted)
Specialist on Congress and the Legislative Process
-redacted-@crs.loc.gov-....

Acknowledgments

This report was originally authored by (name redacted), former Senior Specialist at CRS. The listed author updated this report and is available to respond to inquiries on the subject.

---

<sup>2</sup> For more information, see CRS Report RS20234, Expedited or "Fast-Track" Legislative Procedures, by (name redacted)

EveryCRSReport.com

The Congressional Research Service (CRS) is a federal legislative branch agency, housed inside the Library of Congress, charged with providing the United States Congress non-partisan advice on issues that may come before Congress.

EveryCRSReport.com republishes CRS reports that are available to all Congressional staff. The reports are not classified, and Members of Congress routinely make individual reports available to the public.

Prior to our republication, we redacted names, phone numbers and email addresses of analysts who produced the reports. We also added this page to the report. We have not intentionally made any other changes to any report published on EveryCRSReport.com.

CRS reports, as a work of the United States government, are not subject to copyright protection in the United States. Any CRS report may be reproduced and distributed in its entirety without permission from CRS. However, as a CRS report may include copyrighted images or material from a third party, you may need to obtain permission of the copyright holder if you wish to copy or otherwise use copyrighted material.

Information in a CRS report should not be relied upon for purposes other than public understanding of information that has been provided by CRS to members of Congress in connection with CRS' institutional role.

EveryCRSReport.com is not a government website and is not affiliated with CRS. We do not claim copyright on any CRS report we have republished.