

Taiwan: Select Political and Security Issues

Taiwan, which officially calls itself the Republic of China (ROC), is an island democracy of 23.6 million people located across the Taiwan Strait from mainland China. Since January 1, 1979, U.S.-Taiwan relations have been unofficial, a consequence of the Carter Administration's decision to establish diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China (PRC) and break formal diplomatic ties with self-ruled Taiwan, over which the PRC claims sovereignty. The Taiwan Relations Act (TRA, P.L. 96-8; 22 U.S.C. 3301 et seq.), enacted on April 10, 1979, provides a legal basis for this unofficial bilateral relationship. It also includes commitments related to Taiwan's security.

Trump Administration Policy

After initially questioning the long-standing U.S. "one-China" policy, President Donald J. Trump used a February 2017 telephone call with PRC President Xi Jinping to recommit the United States to the policy, under which the United States maintains only unofficial ties with Taiwan, while upholding the TRA. The Trump Administration's December 2017 National Security Strategy states that the United States "will maintain our strong ties with Taiwan in accordance with our 'One China' policy, including our commitments under the Taiwan Relations Act to provide for Taiwan's legitimate defense needs and deter coercion."

Trump Administration language on Taiwan has evolved since 2017. The Department of Defense's (DOD's) June 2019 Indo-Pacific Strategy Report discusses Taiwan without referencing the U.S. "one-China" policy. In a first for a high-profile U.S. government report in the era of unofficial relations, it refers to Taiwan as a "country." The strategy presents Taiwan, along with Singapore, New Zealand, and Mongolia, as Indo-Pacific democracies that are "reliable, capable, and natural partners of the United States." The document also asserts that, "The United States has a vital interest in upholding the rules-based international order, which includes a strong, prosperous, and democratic Taiwan." In line with the strategy, in June 2019, DOD created a new Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense (DASD) position focused solely on China, leaving Taiwan under the DASD for East Asia. With the move, DOD for the first time assigned responsibility for China and Taiwan to separate DASDs. In another first, in May 2019, the United States hosted a meeting between the U.S. and Taiwan National Security Advisors. On May 30, 2019, a spokesperson for the PRC's Ministry of National Defense accused the United States of "playing with fire" in its approach to Taiwan.

The United States conducts unofficial relations with Taiwan through the American Institute in Taiwan (AIT), a nonprofit corporation. A new $255-million AIT complex in Taipei opened in May 2019. AIT-Taiwan collaborations include the Global Cooperation and Training Framework and new Indo-Pacific Democratic Governance Consultations.

Taiwan's Modern History

China's Qing Dynasty ceded Taiwan to Japan at the end of the First Sino-Japanese War in 1895. The Republic of China, which was founded in 1912 on mainland China and led by the Kuomintang Party (KMT), assumed control of Taiwan in 1945, after Japan's defeat in World War II. In 1949, after losing a civil war to the Communist Party of China, the KMT moved the seat of the ROC to Taipei, and the Communists established the PRC on mainland China.

Figure I. Taiwan

Source: Graphic by CRS. Map generated by Hannah Fischer using data from NGA (2017); DoS (2015); Esri (2014); DeLorme (2014).

Long after the retreat to Taiwan, the KMT continued to assert that the ROC government was the sole legitimate government of all China. In 1971, however, United Nations General Assembly Resolution 2758 recognized the PRC's representatives as "the only legitimate representatives of China to the United Nations," and expelled "the representatives of Chiang Kai-shek," the ROC's president at the time. Taiwan has remained outside the United Nations ever since. Taiwan today claims "effective jurisdiction" only over Taiwan, the archipelagos of Penghu, Kinmen, and Matsu, and some smaller islands. The ROC also claims disputed islands in the East China Sea and South China Sea.

On Taiwan, the KMT maintained authoritarian one-party rule until 1987, when it began allowing political liberalization. Current President Tsai Ing-wen's Democratic Progressive Party (DPP), was founded in 1986. Taiwan held its first direct parliamentary election in 1992 and its first direct presidential election in 1996. President Tsai's May 2016 inauguration marked Taiwan's third peaceful transfer of political power from one party to another. In 2016, the DPP also ended the KMT's previously unbroken control of Taiwan's legislature, the 113-member Legislative Yuan.

The DPP suffered deep losses in November 2018 local elections. It now controls 6 of Taiwan's 22 municipalities, to the KMT's 15, with one in the hands of an independent. Taiwan is to hold presidential and legislative elections on January 11, 2020. President Tsai is running for re-election.

U.S. Commitments Related to Taiwan

Four documents have long underpinned U.S. policy on Taiwan: the TRA and joint communiqués concluded with the PRC in 1972, 1978, and 1982. In the communiqués, the United States said it would recognize the PRC as the "sole legal government of China"; acknowledge, if not affirm, "the Chinese position that there is but one China and Taiwan is part of China"; and maintain only unofficial relations with Taiwan. The United States does not take a position on Taiwan's future status, but insists that it be resolved peacefully without resort to threats or use of force.

Key provisions of the TRA include:

- Relations with Taiwan shall be carried out through AIT. (AIT Taipei performs many of the same functions as U.S. embassies elsewhere and is staffed by U.S. government personnel assigned or detailed to AIT.)
- It is U.S. policy "to consider any effort to determine the future of Taiwan by other than peaceful means, including by boycotts or embargoes, a threat to the peace and security of the Western Pacific area and of grave concern to the United States."
- It is U.S. policy "to maintain the capacity of the United States to resist any resort to force or other forms of coercion that would jeopardize the security, or the social or economic system, of the people on Taiwan."
- The United States "will make available to Taiwan such defense articles and defense services in such quantity as may be necessary to enable Taiwan to maintain a sufficient self-defense capability."

The TRA does not require the United States to defend Taiwan, but states that is U.S. policy to maintain the capacity to do so, creating "strategic ambiguity" regarding the U.S. role in the event of a PRC attack on Taiwan.

The Six Assurances

President Ronald Reagan communicated what became known as the "Six Assurances" to Taiwan before the announcement of the 1982 U.S.-PRC communiqué. They include an assurance that in the negotiations with the PRC, the United States did not agree "to engage in prior consultations with Beijing on arms sales to Taiwan," and did not agree to set a date for ending arms sales to Taiwan.

The PRC, Taiwan, and "One China"

The PRC maintains that mainland China and Taiwan are parts of "one China" whose sovereignty cannot be divided. A 2005 PRC Anti-Secession Law commits Beijing to "do its utmost with maximum sincerity to achieve a peaceful unification" with Taiwan, but states that in the case of Taiwan's "secession" from China, or in a situation in which the PRC concludes that possibilities for peaceful unification have been exhausted, "the state shall employ non-peaceful means and other necessary measures to protect China's sovereignty and territorial integrity." On January 2, 2019, PRC President Xi recommitted the PRC to peaceful unification, but reserved the option to use force. He called for exploring "a Taiwan plan for 'one country, two systems,'" a reference to an arrangement under which mainland China and Taiwan would be parts of one country, but maintain different political and other systems.

Unlike her KMT predecessor, President Tsai has declined to endorse the "1992 consensus," under which both sides of the Taiwan Strait acknowledged "one China," but retained their own interpretations of what it meant. In January 2019, Tsai charged that "the Beijing authorities' definition of the '1992 consensus' is 'one China' and 'one country, two systems.'" The latter approach, she said in March 2019, "unilaterally undermines the status quo, eliminates the sovereignty of the Republic of China (Taiwan), and forces Taiwan to accept unification with China."

The PRC announced in June 2016 that it had suspended contacts with Taiwan because of President Tsai's unwillingness to endorse the "1992 consensus." Since Tsai's 2016 election, the PRC has increased pressure on Taiwan in many areas. It has established diplomatic relations with six countries that previously recognized Taiwan: the Gambia, Sao Tome and Principe, Panama, the Dominican Republic, Burkina Faso, and El Salvador. Taiwan retains diplomatic ties with 17 countries. Militarily, the PRC has stepped up bomber, fighter, and surveillance aircraft patrols around Taiwan. Internationally, the PRC has sought to block Taiwan attendance at international meetings, including as an observer at annual meetings of the World Health Assembly (WHA).

Taiwan's Security

The United States terminated its Mutual Defense Treaty with Taiwan in 1980. It engages with Taiwan's military today through dialogues, training, and arms sales. The Trump Administration has notified Congress of major Foreign Military Sales to Taiwan three times, in June 2017 (seven cases valued at $1.36 billion), in September 2018 (a $330 million case), and in April 2019 (a $500 million case). In April 2018, the State Department issued licenses to allow U.S. firms to market technology to Taiwan for its indigenous submarine program. Taiwan has publicly confirmed requests to purchase tanks, missiles, and F-16V fighter jets from the United States. In 2019, the U.S. Navy has conducted monthly transits of the Taiwan Strait.

Select Legislation in the 116th Congress

In the 116th Congress, H.Res. 273 and S.Con.Res. 13, both agreed to by their respective chambers, reaffirm the U.S. commitment to Taiwan and the TRA. House-passed H.R. 353 and S. 249, reported on June 3, 2019, would require additional information in annual reports on Taiwan and the WHA. S. 249 would also require briefings on U.S. actions to strengthen Taiwan's official and unofficial relations with other governments. The Taiwan Assurance Act of 2019 (House-passed H.R. 2002 and S. 878) would seek to foster security in Taiwan.

---

Susan V. Lawrence,

IF10275

---

Disclaimer

This document was prepared by the Congressional Research Service (CRS). CRS serves as nonpartisan shared staff to congressional committees and Members of Congress. It operates solely at the behest of and under the direction of Congress. Information in a CRS Report should not be relied upon for purposes other than public understanding of information that has been provided by CRS to Members of Congress in connection with CRS's institutional role. CRS Reports, as a work of the United States Government, are not subject to copyright protection in the United States. Any CRS Report may be reproduced and distributed in its entirety without permission from CRS. However, as a CRS Report may include copyrighted images or material from a third party, you may need to obtain the permission of the copyright holder if you wish to copy or otherwise use copyrighted material.