

The Congressional Review Act (CRA): Frequently Asked Questions

Maeve P. Carey

Specialist in Government Organization and Management

Christopher M. Davis

Analyst on Congress and the Legislative Process

Updated January 14, 2020

Congressional Research Service

7-....

www.crs.gov

R43992

Summary

The Congressional Review Act (CRA) is an oversight tool that Congress may use to overturn rules issued by federal agencies. The CRA was included as part of the Small Business Regulatory Enforcement Fairness Act (SBREFA), which was signed into law on March 29, 1996. The CRA requires agencies to report on their rulemaking activities to Congress and provides Congress with a special set of procedures under which to consider legislation to overturn those rules.

Under the CRA, before a rule can take effect, an agency must submit a report to each house of Congress and the comptroller general containing a copy of the rule; a concise general statement describing the rule, including whether it is a major rule; and the proposed effective date of the rule. After receiving the report, Members of Congress have specified time periods during which they must submit and act on a joint resolution of disapproval to take advantage of the CRA's special "fast track" procedures. If both houses pass the resolution, it is sent to the President for signature or veto. If the President were to veto the resolution, Congress could vote to override the veto.

If a joint resolution of disapproval is submitted within the CRA-specified deadline, passed by Congress, and signed by the President, the CRA states that the disapproved rule "shall not take effect (or continue)." That is, the rule would be deemed not to have had any effect at any time. Even provisions that had become effective would be retroactively negated.

Furthermore, if a joint resolution of disapproval is enacted, the CRA provides that a rule may not be issued in "substantially the same form" as the disapproved rule unless it is specifically authorized by a subsequent law. The CRA does not define what would constitute a rule that is "substantially the same" as a nullified rule. Additionally, the statute prohibits judicial review of any "determination, finding, action, or omission under" the CRA.

This report discusses the most frequently asked questions received by the Congressional Research Service about the CRA. It addresses questions relating to the applicability of the act, the requirements for submission of rules, the procedural requirements that must be met for Congress to file and act upon a CRA joint resolution of disapproval, and the effects of an enacted CRA joint resolution of disapproval. This report also discusses potential advantages and disadvantages of using the CRA to disapprove rules, as well as other options available to Congress to conduct oversight of agency rulemaking.

For further questions not addressed here, please contact Maeve P. Carey (questions regarding history, scope, and agency compliance with the CRA), Christopher M. Davis (questions regarding congressional procedures and day counts under the CRA), or Valerie C. Brannon (questions regarding legal issues under the CRA).

Contents

Overview of the Congressional Review Act (CRA).....	1
What Is the CRA?	1
What Are Advantages and Disadvantages of Using the CRA?	1
How Many Rules Have Been Overturned Using the CRA?	6
Definitions Under the CRA	6
What Is a Covered Rule Under the CRA?.....	6
Does the CRA Apply to Guidance Documents?	7
Does the CRA Apply to Interim Final Rules?.....	7
Does the CRA Apply to Proposed Rules?	8
What Is a Major Rule Under the CRA?	9
What Happens When a Rule Is Designated as Major?	9
Who Determines Whether a Rule Is Major?	10
Does the CRA Apply to Non-Major Rules?	11
Agency Submission of Rules.....	11
When Does an Agency Have to Submit a Rule to Congress and GAO?.....	11
How Do I Check If a Rule Has Been Submitted Under the CRA?	11
What Happens If an Agency Does Not Submit a Rule to Congress?.....	11
Congressional Procedures Under the CRA	13
How Do I Introduce a Joint Resolution of Disapproval?	13
Can a Joint Resolution of Disapproval Contain a Preamble?	13
How Is a Joint Resolution of Disapproval Different from a Bill?	14
Can a Joint Resolution of Disapproval Be Used to Invalidate Part of a Rule or More Than One Rule?.....	14
What Are the CRA “Fast Track” Procedures?.....	14
What Are the CRA “Fast Track” Procedures for Senate Committee Consideration?	15
What Are the CRA “Fast Track” Procedures for Senate Floor Consideration?	15
For How Long Are the “Fast Track” Procedures Available?	15
Do Disapproval Resolutions Have to Be Submitted in Both Chambers of Congress?	16
What Happens If Congress Adjourns Before the CRA Initiation or Action Periods Conclude?	16
Is It Possible to Ascertain When the Periods for Submission, Discharge, and Action on a Resolution to Disapprove a Given Rule Begin and End?.....	17
Effect of a Resolution of Disapproval	17
What Is the Effect of Enacting a CRA Joint Resolution of Disapproval?.....	17
When Is a New Rule “Substantially the Same” as a Disapproved Rule?	17
What Is the Effect of a CRA Joint Resolution Disapproving an Amendment to a Previously Issued Rule?	19
How Does the CRA Affect the Effective Date of a Rule?	19
What Happens If a Rule That Is Already Effective Is Overturned?	20
Is There Judicial Review Under the CRA?	20
What Other Tools Are Available to Congress for Conducting Oversight of Federal Regulations?	23

Appendixes

Appendix A. Rules Overturned Using the Congressional Review Act	25
Appendix B. Government Accountability Office (GAO) Opinions on Whether Certain Agency Actions Are “Rules” Under the CRA.....	27

Contacts

Author Contact Information	30
----------------------------------	----

Overview of the Congressional Review Act (CRA)

What Is the CRA?

The Congressional Review Act (CRA) is an oversight tool that Congress may use to pass legislation overturning a rule issued by a federal agency. When Congress passes a law, it often grants rulemaking authority to federal agencies to implement provisions in the law. That delegation of rulemaking authority, and the rules issued by federal agencies under this authority, is a crucial component of the policymaking process. Congress has an interest in ensuring that federal agencies, when issuing rules, are faithful to congressional intent. To conduct oversight of federal agency actions, Congress has a number of tools available, including the CRA.¹

The CRA was enacted in 1996 as part of the Small Business Regulatory Enforcement Fairness Act.² Under the CRA, before a rule can take effect, an agency must submit the rule to Congress and the Government Accountability Office (GAO).³ Upon receipt of the rule by Congress, Members of Congress have a specified time period during which to submit and take action on a joint resolution disapproving the rule. If both houses pass the resolution, it is sent to the President for signature or veto. If the President were to veto the resolution, Congress could vote to override the veto. Enactment of the resolution would take the rule out of effect or prevent it from going into effect, and the agency would be prohibited from issuing a rule that is “substantially the same” without further authorization from Congress.

What Are Advantages and Disadvantages of Using the CRA?

The CRA contains several notable features that could be seen as advantages and/or disadvantages to disapproving rules using the CRA, rather than by some other means.

Procedural

The most notable feature of the CRA is its special set of parliamentary procedures for considering a joint resolution disapproving an agency final rule. Perhaps most significantly, when a joint resolution of disapproval meets certain criteria, it cannot be filibustered in the Senate. In addition, once 20 calendar days have passed after the receipt and publication of the final rule, the Senate committee to which a joint resolution disapproving the rule has been referred can be discharged of further consideration if 30 Senators sign and file a petition.⁴ Once the committee is discharged, any Senator can make a nondebatable motion to proceed to consider the disapproval resolution. Should a majority of the Senate vote to consider the disapproval resolution, debate on it is limited, and a final vote would be all but guaranteed.⁵

Use of the CRA also involves several potential procedural disadvantages. First, one might argue that the likelihood of a presidential veto (discussed in detail below) means that most CRA disapproval resolutions are likely to be subject to a de facto supermajority requirement. Second, the CRA does not establish any “fast track” procedures for initial consideration of a disapproval resolution in the House of Representatives. As a result, unless the House majority party is willing

¹ For a broader discussion of Congress’s oversight tools, see CRS Report RL30240, Congressional Oversight Manual.

² Title II, Subtitle E, P.L. 104-121, 5 U.S.C. §§601 et seq.

³ 5 U.S.C. §801(a)(1)(A).

⁴ 5 U.S.C. §802(c).

⁵ 5 U.S.C. §802(d).

to schedule the measure for consideration, in all likelihood it will not be considered. Third, unlike the regular legislative process, the CRA disapproval mechanism is available in the Senate only during certain statutorily specified time periods. Fourth, calculating the periods established by the CRA for submitting and acting on a disapproval resolution can be complicated, especially in cases where the act provides for additional submission and action periods in a subsequent session of Congress. Fifth, unlike regular legislation, each CRA disapproval resolution can be aimed only at a single final rule in its entirety. Multiple disapproval resolutions cannot be “bundled” together and still maintain their privileged parliamentary status.⁶ Relatedly, because CRA disapproval resolutions refer to a rule as a whole, the law does not give Congress the opportunity to expressly disapprove only specific aspects of a rule. Finally, if either chamber rejects a CRA disapproval resolution on a major rule, it could have the effect of putting a regulation in force sooner than would otherwise be the case.⁷

Prohibition on Issuance of “Substantially the Same” Rules

If a joint resolution of disapproval is enacted, it not only invalidates the rule in question; it also bars the agency from issuing another rule in “substantially the same form” as the disapproved rule unless Congress authorizes the agency to do so in a subsequent law.⁸ Thus, enactment of a CRA joint resolution has the immediate effect of taking the rule out of effect or preventing it from taking effect, but it also has a more long-term effect on the agency’s ability to issue a substantially similar rule. (See “When Is a New Rule “Substantially the Same” as a Disapproved Rule?” below.) For Members who want to disapprove a rule, this restriction on future agency behavior could be seen as an advantage of using the CRA to overturn the rule. On the other hand, some might argue that the prohibition on “substantially the same” rules is actually a disadvantage of the CRA, as it creates uncertainty and potentially restricts the agency’s ability to act going forward. This can create an especially difficult situation if Congress uses the CRA to disapprove rules that were specifically required by law, as the CRA takes rules out of effect or prevents them from taking effect but does not remove the underlying statutory requirement or authorization for the regulations.

Requirement for Reporting to Congress on Rulemaking Activities

Not only can Congress use the CRA to overturn agency rules, but certain provisions of the CRA may be viewed as helping to increase congressional awareness of federal agency actions. The requirement for agencies to submit their rules to Congress,⁹ and the subsequent referral of each rule to the committee of jurisdiction,¹⁰ functions as a notification mechanism through which committees and Members can be made aware of agencies’ rulemaking activities. Although Members are likely to become aware of high-profile rules through other means, the referral of

⁶ At the end of the 114th Congress and at the start of the 115th Congress, the House of Representatives passed legislation to amend the CRA and allow the bundling of disapproval resolutions in this way for “midnight rules”—rules issued late in the final year of an outgoing administration. Companion bills in the Senate were not adopted. See the Midnight Rules Relief Act, H.R. 21 (115th Congress), H.R. 5982 (114th Congress), S. 34 (115th Congress), and S. 3483 (114th Congress).

⁷ See 5 U.S.C. §801(a)(5).

⁸ 5 U.S.C. §801(b)(2). For a discussion of the prohibition on promulgating another substantially similar rule, see “When Is a New Rule “Substantially the Same” as a Disapproved Rule?” below and CRS Insight IN10660, What Is the Effect of Enacting a Congressional Review Act Resolution of Disapproval?, by Maeve P. Carey.

⁹ 5 U.S.C. §801(a)(1)(A).

¹⁰ 5 U.S.C. §801(a)(1)(C).

each rule upon receipt in Congress provides an additional notification for rules that may be of a more narrow interest.

Additional Information Publicly Available on Federal Rules

Another benefit of the CRA, for Members of Congress as well as for the public, is that it has resulted in a publicly available database of rules and set of reports on major rules compiled by GAO. Since the CRA's enactment, GAO has posted a record of receipt of the rules agencies submitted under the CRA to a database on its website.¹¹ The website can be used to search for final rules by elements such as the title, issuing agency, date of publication, type of rule (major or non-major), and effective date. The website also contains GAO's reports, required under the CRA and discussed below, on major rules. Each major rule report contains summary information and an assessment of the agency's completion of certain cost-benefit and other analytical requirements.¹²

Drawing Attention to a Rule

Another potential advantage of the CRA is that it provides a method for Members of Congress to draw attention to a particular rule. The required language of a joint resolution of disapproval, which is stipulated in the CRA, provides for a relatively straightforward process through which a Member can make clear his or her opposition to a rule.¹³ Indeed, while the CRA has been used to overturn 17 rules, many more joint resolutions of disapproval have been introduced since the CRA's enactment. Members of Congress have introduced over 200 joint resolutions of disapproval under the CRA pertaining to more than 125 rules.¹⁴

In addition, the threat of submission or passage of a disapproval resolution may provide a mechanism through which a Member can pressure an agency to reach a particular outcome, either related to that specific rule or on another matter.¹⁵ Prior to the 115th Congress, Congress had rarely used the CRA to disapprove a rule, so arguably, the CRA was not then a credible threat to agencies and thus was not likely to influence agency behavior. However, Congress's more frequent recent use of the CRA could suggest otherwise—particularly for Administrations that may be nearing the end of a term.¹⁶

¹¹ GAO's federal rules database is available at <https://www.gao.gov/legal/other-legal-work/congressional-review-act#database>. It is important to note that the date of receipt of a final rule listed in the GAO database represents the date that the final rule was received by GAO. This date may or may not be the same date that the rule was received by the House and Senate, the latter being the date used for calculating the various CRA time periods for review and action. See "How Do I Introduce a Joint Resolution of Disapproval?" for a discussion of how "receipt by Congress" is determined for purposes of estimating the time periods governing the CRA disapproval mechanism.

¹² See "What Happens When a Rule Is Designated as Major?" for more information on these reports.

¹³ See "How Do I Introduce a Joint Resolution of Disapproval?" below for the stipulated text.

¹⁴ Data obtained by CRS from Congress.gov based on bill text searches using the CRA's stipulated text. A list of all joint resolutions of disapproval introduced under the CRA can be provided to congressional clients upon request from the authors of this report.

¹⁵ See Allan Freedman, "GOP's Secret Weapon Against Regulations: Finesse," CQ Weekly, September 5, 1998; and Steven J. Balla, "Organization and Congressional Review of Agency Regulations," Journal of Law, Economics, and Organization, vol. 16, no. 2 (October 2000), pp. 426-429.

¹⁶ See section below entitled "Presidential Veto/De Facto Supermajority Requirement" for a discussion of why the CRA is generally more effective for overturning rules issued at the end of a President's term.

Increased Oversight of Independent Regulatory Agencies

For two reasons, the CRA may present an opportunity for more political control over independent regulatory agencies' rulemaking activities. First, as discussed more below (see "Presidential Veto/De Facto Supermajority Requirement"), enactment of a CRA resolution of disapproval is generally considered to be unlikely since a President would be expected to veto a joint resolution disapproving a rule issued by the President's own Administration. However, a President may be more likely to sign a joint resolution disapproving a rule that has been issued by an independent regulatory agency, a type of agency over which the President has less control.¹⁷ Unlike executive agencies, independent regulatory agencies do not submit their regulations to the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) for review under Executive Order 12866, which seeks in part to ensure that federal agencies' regulations are in line with the President's policy priorities.¹⁸ As such, in general, the independent regulatory agencies' regulations are considered to be more removed from presidential control than executive agencies' regulations, because the President—through OMB—has less influence over the content of their rules. The CRA arguably presents an opportunity for Congress and the President to exercise more control over those agencies' rules by overturning them.

Second, under the CRA, the administrator of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs (OIRA) in OMB is responsible for determining which rules are "major." Prior to 2019, OIRA had largely deferred to independent regulatory agencies in making these determinations about their own rules.¹⁹ In April 2019, the Trump Administration announced a procedural change for the independent regulatory agencies, which had previously not submitted their rules to OMB for review.²⁰ Under the new policy, all agencies, including independent regulatory agencies, are required to submit their regulations to OIRA for a determination of whether the rules met the CRA's statutory definition of major. Arguably, this new procedure could potentially provide a point of leverage for the White House (through OMB and OIRA) over independent regulatory agencies' rules if OIRA chooses to use this mechanism to influence the substance of the rules in any way.²¹

¹⁷ Congress created a number of federal agencies with certain characteristics to make them independent from the President and, in some cases, from Congress itself. Those agencies, generally referred to as independent regulatory agencies or independent regulatory commissions, are listed at Title 44, Section 3502(5) of the United States Code and include agencies such as the Federal Reserve Board and the Securities and Exchange Commission. For a discussion of the characteristics that make a number of those agencies independent from Congress and the President, see CRS Report R43391, Independence of Federal Financial Regulators: Structure, Funding, and Other Issues, by Henry B. Hogue, Marc Labonte, and Baird Webel. The President generally has limited ability to remove officials from those agencies, for example, and those agencies' budget requests may be submitted directly to Congress without modification by the President. In addition, some agencies may receive their funding outside the annual appropriations process.

¹⁸ Executive Order 12866, "Regulatory Planning and Review," 58 Federal Register 51735, October 4, 1993.

¹⁹ Cass R. Sunstein, "Trump White House Seeks New Power Over Agencies," Bloomberg, April 23, 2019, <https://www.bloomberg.com/opinion/articles/2019-04-23/trump-seeks-more-control-of-fed-sec-and-other-agencies>. See also "Who Determines Whether a Rule Is Major?" below for further discussion.

²⁰ Russell T. Vought, acting director, OMB, "Guidance on Compliance with the Congressional Review Act" (M-19-14), memorandum to the heads of executive departments and agencies, April 11, 2019, <https://www.whitehouse.gov/wp-content/uploads/2019/04/M-19-14.pdf>. See also CRS Insight IN11122, OMB Issues New CRA Guidance, Potentially Changing Relationship with Independent Agencies, by Maeve P. Carey.

²¹ See CRS Insight IN11122, OMB Issues New CRA Guidance, Potentially Changing Relationship with Independent Agencies, by Maeve P. Carey. See also Bridget C. E. Dooling, "How Independent Are Government Agencies? OMB's Move on 'Major' Rules May Tell Us," The Hill, April 13, 2019, <https://thehill.com/opinion/white-house/438756-how-independent-are-government-agencies-ombs-move-on-major-rules-mat>; and William Funk, "OMB Leveraging the CRA to Add to Its Oversight of Independent Regulatory Agencies," Yale Journal on Regulation Notice and Comment

Failure of a CRA Joint Resolution of Disapproval Could Make a Major Rule Take Effect Faster Than Otherwise Allowed Under the CRA

In the case of some major rules, it appears that use of the CRA mechanism may make the rule go into effect more quickly than it otherwise would. Under the requirements of the CRA, agencies must delay the effective date of major rules by at least 60 days. This is essentially an expansion of the Administrative Procedure Act's (APA) requirement that agencies delay the effective date of most rules by at least 30 days.²² Should either chamber choose to consider a joint resolution disapproving a major rule and then vote to reject the resolution, the rule in question may go into force immediately, notwithstanding any layover period in its effective date established by the CRA.²³ No rule would go into effect under such a scenario, however, until the effective date set by the agency in the rule itself has been reached.

Disapproval of an Entire Rule

Unlike under the regular legislative process, the CRA can be used only to invalidate an agency final rule in its entirety. It cannot be used to modify or restructure a rule in order to make it acceptable to Congress.

If Congress were to use the regular legislative process instead of the CRA, Congress could invalidate part of a rule or instruct the agency to amend or repeal part of a rule. However, regular legislation would not be eligible for the same expedited procedures in the Senate in the same way a CRA resolution of disapproval would. It would not enjoy expedited procedures for floor consideration and might be subject to filibuster.

Presidential Veto/De Facto Supermajority Requirement

One of the biggest challenges for using the CRA to overturn rules is that a President can generally be expected to veto a joint resolution of disapproval attempting to overturn a rule issued by the President's own Administration. A joint resolution of disapproval requires the signature of the President to become law—a very unlikely prospect if the President's own Administration issued the rule. If the President were to veto the measure, Congress could attempt to override the veto. A two-thirds majority of both houses of Congress is required to override a President's veto. This creates a de facto supermajority requirement for a CRA joint resolution to be enacted in most cases.

During a transition period following the inauguration of a new President of a different party than the outgoing President, however, the CRA is more likely to be used successfully. Because of the structure of the time periods during which Congress can take action under the CRA, there is a period at the beginning of each new Administration during which rules issued near the end of the previous Administration are eligible for consideration under the CRA.²⁴ This period is sometimes Blog, April 18, 2019, <https://yalejreg.com/nc/omb-leveraging-the-cra-to-add-to-its-oversight-of-independent-regulatory-agencies-by-william-funk/>.

²² Under the APA's requirement for notice and comment rules, agencies must generally allow at least 30 days to elapse between the publication of a rule and its effective date, though there are some exceptions (5 U.S.C. §553(d)). In many cases, agencies allow additional time beyond the required 30 days before making a rule effective. Similarly, with major rules, agencies often allow for more than the 60 days required under the CRA.

²³ 5 U.S.C. §801(a)(3), §801(a)(5). Title 5, Section 801(a)(5), states, "Notwithstanding paragraph (3), the effective date of a rule shall not be delayed by operation of this chapter beyond the date on which either House of Congress votes to reject a joint resolution of disapproval under section 802."

²⁴ The rules issued near the end of an Administration are often referred to as "midnight rules." See CRS Report referred to as a “lookback” period. The vast majority of the instances in which the CRA was used to overturn a rule took place during such a period.

How Many Rules Have Been Overturned Using the CRA?

As of January 9, 2020, the CRA had been used to overturn a total of 17 rules. Sixteen of those rules were overturned in the 115th Congress (2017-2018). Prior to the 115th Congress, one rule was overturned in the 107th Congress (2001-2002). For a list of all the overturned rules, see Appendix A.

Definitions Under the CRA

What Is a Covered Rule Under the CRA?

The CRA adopts the definition of rule that appears in Section 551 of the APA, with three exceptions.²⁵ Section 551 of the APA defines rule as the whole or a part of an agency statement of general or particular applicability and future effect designed to implement, interpret, or prescribe law or policy or describing the organization, procedure, or practice requirements of an agency.²⁶

The first exception in the CRA definition of rule is for rules of particular applicability, including a rule that “approves or prescribes for the future rates, wages, prices, services, or allowances therefor, corporate or financial structures, reorganizations, mergers, or acquisitions thereof, or accounting practices or disclosures bearing on any of the foregoing.”²⁷ Second, the CRA’s definition of rule excludes “any rule relating to agency management or personnel.”²⁸ Finally, the CRA also excludes “any rule of agency organization, procedure, or practice that does not substantially affect the rights or obligations of non-agency parties.”²⁹

Notably, the CRA adopts the broadest definition of rule contained in the APA, which is broader than the category of rules subject to the APA’s notice-and-comment rulemaking procedures.³⁰ Therefore, some agency actions that are not subject to notice-and-comment rulemaking procedures under the APA may still be considered a rule under the CRA.

R42612, Midnight Rulemaking: Background and Options for Congress, by Maeve P. Carey, for more information about the history, practice, and oversight of midnight rulemaking.

²⁵ 5 U.S.C. §804(3). For an in-depth discussion of the definition of rule under the CRA, see CRS Report R45248, The Congressional Review Act: Determining Which “Rules” Must Be Submitted to Congress, by Valerie C. Brannon and Maeve P. Carey.

²⁶ 5 U.S.C. §551(4).

²⁷ 5 U.S.C. §804(3)(A). The CRA definition of rule does not specifically exclude facilities or appliances, which are also listed in the APA definition of a rule (5 U.S.C. §551(4)).

²⁸ 5 U.S.C. §804(3)(B).

²⁹ 5 U.S.C. §804(3)(C).

³⁰ 5 U.S.C. §553. Generally, the requirements for notice-and-comment rulemaking procedures do not apply to “interpretative rules, general statements of policy, or rules of agency organization, procedure, or practice” or “when the agency for good cause finds ... that notice and public procedure thereon are impracticable, unnecessary, or contrary to the public interest.”

For an in-depth discussion of what agency actions are considered rules under the CRA, see CRS Report R45248, The Congressional Review Act: Determining Which “Rules” Must Be Submitted to Congress, by Valerie C. Brannon and Maeve P. Carey.

Does the CRA Apply to Guidance Documents?

The CRA applies to some guidance documents and other agency actions taken outside of the APA’s notice-and-comment rulemaking procedures. Because the broad scope of the CRA’s definition of rule includes some agency actions such as policy statements and interpretive rules—which are sometimes referred to as guidance documents—the CRA may be available to overturn those types of actions. Whether any particular agency action is a rule covered by the CRA depends on the specific facts involved—that is, the nature of the action and its effect.³¹

A practical challenge for using the CRA to overturn guidance documents is that, as a matter of practice, agencies often do not submit covered guidance documents to Congress despite the CRA’s requirement for them to do so. However, in recent years, Congress has developed a practice under which it can still review rules under the CRA, even if the rule or guidance document was not submitted under the statute. For a brief discussion of how the CRA may still be used in these instances, see “What Happens If an Agency Does Not Submit a Rule to Congress?” below.³² For a more detailed discussion, see also CRS Report R45248, The Congressional Review Act: Determining Which “Rules” Must Be Submitted to Congress, by Valerie C. Brannon and Maeve P. Carey.

Although the CRA was clearly intended to cover some agency guidance documents,³³ the practical effect of overturning any particular guidance document may not always be clear. In particular, the effect of a disapproval resolution may be limited because some guidance documents, by their nature, already lack the force of law or any legal effect.³⁴

Does the CRA Apply to Interim Final Rules?

Yes. Interim final rules are considered final rules that carry the force and effect of law,³⁵ and, therefore, an interim final rule that satisfies the CRA definition of rule will be subject to the CRA.

³¹ For an in-depth discussion of the definition of rule under the CRA and the types of agency actions that are covered, see CRS Report R45248, The Congressional Review Act: Determining Which “Rules” Must Be Submitted to Congress, by Valerie C. Brannon and Maeve P. Carey.

³² See also CRS In Focus IF11096, The Congressional Review Act: Defining a “Rule” and Overturning a Rule an Agency Did Not Submit to Congress, by Maeve P. Carey and Valerie C. Brannon.

³³ A statement inserted into the Congressional Record after the CRA’s enactment by its sponsors states that the CRA was intended to encompass some agency statements that would not be subject to the APA’s notice-and-comment rulemaking requirements: “The committees intend this chapter to be interpreted broadly with regard to the type and scope of rules that are subject to congressional review. The term ‘rule’ in subsection 804(3) begins with the definition of a ‘rule’ in subsection 551(4) and excludes three subsets of rules that are modeled on APA sections 551 and 553. This definition of a rule does not turn on whether a given agency must normally comply with the notice-and-comment provisions of the APA.... The definition of ‘rule’ in subsection 551(4) covers a wide spectrum of activities.” Representative Henry Hyde, Congressional Record, daily edition, vol. 142, (April 19, 1996), p. E578.

³⁴ In determining whether a rule is subject to the notice-and-comment rulemaking requirements in the APA, courts may ask whether an agency action such as a guidance document has the force of law. If it lacks the force of law, it likely will not be subject to these procedures. See, for example, Gen. Elec. v. EPA, 290 F.3d 377, 382 (D.C. Cir. 2002); Am. Mining Cong. v. Mine Safety & Health Admin., 995 F.2d 1106, 1112 (D.C. Cir. 1993).

³⁵ See Career College Ass’n v. Riley, 74 F.3d 1265 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (“The key word in the title ‘Interim Final Rule,’ unless the title is to be read as an oxymoron, is not interim, but final. ‘Interim’ refers only to the Rule’s intended duration—not its tentative nature.”)

Agencies use interim final rules to promulgate rules without providing the public with notice and an opportunity to comment before publication of the final rule while reserving the right to modify the rule following a post-promulgation comment period.³⁶ Agencies must generally assert a valid “good cause” under the APA to issue any interim final rule, or they must be statutorily authorized to forego notice-and-comment procedures.³⁷

Does the CRA Apply to Proposed Rules?

It does not appear that the CRA applies to proposed rules. Although the CRA does not expressly provide that a rule must be final before it may be reviewed by Congress,³⁸ a proposed rule arguably does not satisfy the CRA definition of rule. GAO specifically advises agencies not to submit proposed rules to Congress or GAO under the CRA.³⁹

In 2014, GAO published a legal opinion determining that the CRA does not apply to proposed rules.⁴⁰ GAO suggested that the statutory scheme indicates that the CRA applies only to final rules, noting that proposed rules are only “an interim step in the rulemaking process” and that GAO’s own role in the review process is not triggered until an agency submits a report, which it does not do until a rule is final.⁴¹ GAO also cited legislative history that, in its view, supported the opinion that the CRA applies only to final rules.⁴²

³⁶ While there are numerous examples of the use of interim final rules prior to 1995, the practice of post-promulgation comments appears to have its genesis in a 1995 recommendation of the Administrative Conference of the United States (ACUS), which suggested the procedure whenever the “impracticable” or “contrary to the public interest” prongs of the “good cause” exemption were invoked. See ACUS Recommendation 95-4, Procedures for Noncontroversial and Expedited Rulemaking, 60 Federal Register 43110, August 18, 1995. See also Michael R. Asimow, “Interim-Final Rules: Making Haste Slowly,” Administrative Law Review vol. 51, no. 3 (Summer 1999).

³⁷ 5 U.S.C. §553(b)(B) (“Except when notice or hearing is required by statute, this subsection does not apply... when the agency for good cause finds (and incorporates the finding and a brief statement of reasons therefor in the rules issued) that notice and public procedure thereon are impracticable, unnecessary, or contrary to the public interest.”) See also Jeffrey S. Lubbers, A Guide to Federal Agency Rulemaking, 6th ed. (2018), pp. 114-116; and CRS Report R44356, The Good Cause Exception to Notice and Comment Rulemaking: Judicial Review of Agency Action, by Jared P. Cole.

In limited cases, agencies have been provided specific statutory authorization to issue interim final rules. For example, see Title 42, Section 300gg-92, of the U.S. Code, stating, “The Secretary [of Health and Human Services] may promulgate any interim final rules as the Secretary determines are appropriate to carry out this subchapter.” Such authority would allow an agency to issue an interim final rule without citing good cause.

³⁸ By contrast, Title 5, Section 704, of the U.S. Code provides that, generally, courts may review only “final agency action.”

³⁹ GAO, “Congressional Review Act (CRA) FAQs,” <https://www.gao.gov/legal/other-legal-work/congressional-review-act/faqs>. (“[Question:] Should agencies submit proposed rules to GAO? [Answer:] No. Agencies should only submit major, non-major, and interim final rules to GAO.”)

⁴⁰ Susan A. Poling, general counsel, GAO, letter to the Honorable Harry Reid, Mitch McConnell, Barbara Boxer, and Thomas Carper, May 29, 2014 (regarding GAO’s Role and Responsibility Under the Congressional Review Act), p. 1. This opinion was written in response to a request from Senator Mitch McConnell, who asked GAO to analyze whether an EPA proposed rule satisfied the definition of rule in the CRA. Senator Mitch McConnell, letter to Gene L. Dodaro, comptroller general of the United States, January 16, 2014. Senator McConnell specifically argued that the manner in which the EPA issued the proposed rule gave it “immediate legal effect,” which distinguished this proposed rule from other proposed rules, which have no immediate legal effect. In its response opinion, GAO did not specifically address the argument that this proposed rule was different than other proposed rules, instead concluding that “the issuance of a proposed rule is an interim step in the rulemaking process intended to satisfy APA’s notice requirement, and, as such, is not a triggering event for CRA purposes.” Poling, p. 6.

⁴¹ Poling, p. 6.

⁴² Poling, p. 5.

Furthermore, GAO stated that its prior decisions had found that an agency action constituted a rule for CRA purposes if “the action imposed requirements that were both certain and final.”⁴³ Since proposed rules “are proposals for future agency action that are subject to change ... and do not have a binding effect on the obligations of any party,” GAO concluded they should not be considered “a triggering event for CRA purposes.”⁴⁴ Ultimately, however, GAO also noted that, because the CRA’s expedited procedure for review of agency rules was enacted pursuant to Congress’s constitutional authority to establish its own procedural rules, it is for “Congress to decide whether [the] CRA would apply to a resolution disapproving a proposed rule.”⁴⁵

What Is a Major Rule Under the CRA?

The CRA defines major rule as any rule that the Administrator of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs [OIRA] of the Office of Management and Budget [OMB] finds has resulted in or is likely to result in—

- (A) an annual effect on the economy of $100,000,000 or more;
- (B) a major increase in costs or prices for consumers, individual industries, Federal, State, or local government agencies, or geographic regions; or
- (C) significant adverse effects on competition, employment, investment, productivity, innovation, or on the ability of United States-based enterprises to compete with foreign-based enterprises in domestic and export markets.

The term does not include any rule promulgated under the Telecommunications Act of 1996 and the amendments made by that Act.⁴⁶

Rules can meet the economic threshold for classification as a major rule ($100 million effect on the economy) for a variety of reasons, including because they involve compliance costs, result in transfers of funds, prompt consumer spending, establish user fees, or result in cost savings for consumers and taxpayers.⁴⁷

What Happens When a Rule Is Designated as Major?

When a rule is designated as major, the CRA subjects it to two additional procedural steps. The first is that the comptroller general is required to prepare and submit to the committees of jurisdiction a report on each major rule within 15 calendar days of its submission or publication date.⁴⁸ This report is to contain “an assessment of the agency’s compliance with procedural steps” required for the rule, including any cost-benefit or other analysis under certain executive orders or statutes such as the Regulatory Flexibility Act and the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act.⁴⁹

⁴³ Poling, p. 8.

⁴⁴ Poling, pp. 6, 8.

⁴⁵ U.S. Const., art. I, §5, cl. 2; Poling, p. 9.

⁴⁶ 5 U.S.C. §804(2).

⁴⁷ See CRS Report R41651, REINS Act: Number and Types of “Major Rules” in Recent Years, by Maeve P. Carey and Curtis W. Copeland.

⁴⁸ 5 U.S.C. §801(a)(2)(A). The major rule reports are posted on GAO’s website at <https://www.gao.gov/legal/other-legal-work/congressional-review-act#reports>.

⁴⁹ P.L. 96-354; P.L. 104-4. For more information about cost-benefit requirements in rulemaking, see CRS Report R41974, Cost-Benefit and Other Analysis Requirements in the Rulemaking Process, coordinated by Maeve P. Carey.

Second, the CRA contains provisions that may delay the effective dates of major rules.⁵⁰ Specifically, if the rule is major, the statute provides that it “shall take effect on the latest of”:

- 60 days after the date that the rule is published in the Federal Register or received by Congress, whichever is later;
- if Congress passes a joint resolution of disapproval and the President vetoes it, the date on which either house of Congress votes and fails to override the veto or 30 session days after the date Congress received the veto, whichever is earlier; or
- the date the rule would have otherwise taken effect, if not for this provision of the CRA.⁵¹

The APA requires most rules to have a 30-day delay in their effective dates.⁵² The CRA requirement for 60 days essentially extends that APA requirement by an additional 30 days for major rules—those that are the most economically impactful. The CRA’s additional delay for major rules allows Congress additional time to consider whether to overturn a major rule before it goes into effect.⁵³

If the rule is not major, the CRA states that the rule “shall take effect as otherwise provided by law after submission to Congress.”⁵⁴

Who Determines Whether a Rule Is Major?

Under the CRA, the administrator of OIRA is responsible for determining whether a rule is major.⁵⁵ The CRA does not specifically require agencies to submit their rules to OIRA so that such a determination can be made.⁵⁶ In April 2019, however, the Trump Administration issued guidance clarifying that agencies, including independent regulatory agencies, should submit their rules to OIRA for this determination.⁵⁷ Prior to 2019, executive agencies had routinely submitted their rules to OIRA review pursuant to executive order,⁵⁸ but OIRA had largely deferred to independent regulatory agencies’ own major rule determinations.⁵⁹

⁵⁰ The CRA has two exceptions to this delay. See “How Does the CRA Affect the Effective Date of a Rule?” below.

⁵¹ 5 U.S.C. §801(a)(3). For a more detailed discussion about how the CRA may alter the effective date of major rules, see “How Does the CRA Affect the Effective Date of a Rule?” below.

⁵² 5 U.S.C. §553(d).

⁵³ Congress can overturn a rule under the CRA regardless of whether it has gone into effect—the CRA states that a rule “shall not take effect (or continue [in effect]), if the Congress enacts a joint resolution of disapproval” (5 U.S.C. §801(b)).

⁵⁴ 5 U.S.C. §801(a)(4).

⁵⁵ 5 U.S.C. §804(2).

⁵⁶ 5 U.S.C. §801(a)(1)(A56); 5 U.S.C. §804(2).

⁵⁷ Vought, “Guidance on Compliance with the Congressional Review Act.”

⁵⁸ Executive Order 12866, “Regulatory Planning and Review,” §3(b). For more on OIRA review, see CRS Report RL32397, Federal Rulemaking: The Role of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs, coordinated by Maeve P. Carey.

⁵⁹ See CRS Insight IN11122, OMB Issues New CRA Guidance, Potentially Changing Relationship with Independent Agencies, by Maeve P. Carey for further discussion of this OMB guidance and “Increased Oversight of Independent Regulatory Agencies” above.

Does the CRA Apply to Non-Major Rules?

Yes. The CRA can be used to overturn any final rule, regardless of whether the rule is major.

Agency Submission of Rules

When Does an Agency Have to Submit a Rule to Congress and GAO?

The CRA does not specify when an agency must submit a rule. However, a rule cannot become effective until after it is submitted.⁶⁰ In practice, agencies generally submit rules around the time the rule is finalized and published in the Federal Register, if such publication is required.

How Do I Check If a Rule Has Been Submitted Under the CRA?

Submissions to Congress

When final rules are submitted to Congress pursuant to the CRA, notice of each chamber's receipt and referral appears in the respective House and Senate sections of the daily Congressional Record devoted to "Executive Communications." They are also entered into a database that can be searched using the main search page of Congress.gov at <https://www.congress.gov>.⁶¹

Submissions to GAO

GAO also maintains a database on its website tracking rules it receives under the CRA. The database can be accessed at <https://www.gao.gov/legal/other-legal-work/congressional-review-act#database>. The GAO database also contains links to the reports GAO produces on major rules.

It is important to note that the GAO database lists the date that the final rule was received by GAO. This date may or may not be the same date that the rule was received by the House and Senate, the latter being the date used for calculating the various CRA time periods for review and action. See "How Do I Introduce a Joint Resolution of Disapproval?" for a discussion of how "receipt by Congress" is determined for purposes of estimating the time periods governing the CRA disapproval mechanism.

What Happens If an Agency Does Not Submit a Rule to Congress?

In some instances, an agency has considered an action not to be a rule under the CRA and has not submitted the action to Congress, even though the action arguably met the CRA's broad definition of rule. Typically, this has occurred when the APA did not require the agency to follow notice-and-comment rulemaking procedures to issue the rule.⁶² If an action meets the definition of rule, regardless of whether it is subject to notice-and-comment procedures, it should be submitted

⁶⁰ 5 U.S.C. §801(a)(1)(A).

⁶¹ The search page at Congress.gov offers a number of searches from its home page. See the categories entitled "House Communications" and "Senate Communications" on the left side of the page.

⁶² See "What Is a Covered Rule Under the CRA?" above. See also CRS Report R45248, The Congressional Review Act: Determining Which "Rules" Must Be Submitted to Congress, by Valerie C. Brannon and Maeve P. Carey.

under the CRA and would therefore be subject to disapproval using the CRA's expedited procedures. Because the CRA's special procedures are not triggered until rules are submitted to Congress, if an agency does not submit a rule to Congress, this could potentially frustrate Congress's ability to review rules under the act. Furthermore, because the CRA contains a provision barring judicial review,⁶³ most courts have declined to review claims challenging an agency's failure to submit a rule, making it unlikely that courts would compel an agency to submit a rule under the CRA even if it met the definition of rule.⁶⁴

Consequently, Congress (and more specifically, the Senate) has developed a practice that allows it to employ the CRA's review mechanism even when an agency does not submit a rule.⁶⁵ In particular, Members of Congress who thought a particular agency action should have been submitted have asked GAO for a formal opinion on whether the specific action satisfies the CRA definition of rule. GAO has issued several opinions of this type since the CRA's enactment in 1996.⁶⁶ In some of these opinions, GAO has determined that the agency action satisfied the CRA definition of rule. A GAO opinion concluding that an agency action is a rule can essentially substitute for the agency's submission of the rule and still allow Congress to use the CRA's procedures for disapproval. In other opinions, GAO has determined that the agency action did not satisfy the CRA definition of rule either because it fell under one of the exceptions or was outside the scope of the statute altogether.

To avail themselves of the CRA's disapproval mechanism following such an opinion, Senators have published the GAO opinion in the Congressional Record.⁶⁷ It appears that, in these cases, the Senate has considered the date of publication of the GAO opinion in the Congressional Record to be the beginning of the periods for congressional review.⁶⁸ Normally, when agencies submit their rules to Congress under the CRA, a record of each rule's receipt is published in the Congressional Record. The publication of the GAO opinion in the Congressional Record fulfills this same purpose: notifying Congress that a rule is now available for review under the CRA.

Notably, the 115th Congress used this alternative process for the first time to initiate consideration of a resolution of disapproval overturning an agency guidance document that had not been submitted under the CRA.⁶⁹ To date, this is the only instance when Congress disapproved a rule

⁶³ 5 U.S.C. §805 ("No determination, finding, action, or omission under this chapter shall be subject to judicial review.")

⁶⁴ See, for example, Wash. Alliance of Tech. Workers v. U.S. Dep't of Homeland Sec., 892 F.3d 332, 346 (D.C. Cir. 2018). See "Is There Judicial Review Under the CRA?" for further discussion of this provision.

⁶⁵ See CRS In Focus IF11096, The Congressional Review Act: Defining a "Rule" and Overturning a Rule an Agency Did Not Submit to Congress, by Maeve P. Carey and Valerie C. Brannon.

⁶⁶ For a list of these opinions, see Appendix B. The opinions are available on GAO's website at https://www.gao.gov/legal/other-legal-work/congressional-review-act/legal_opinions. For a summary of each of the opinions and for a more in-depth discussion of the types of agency actions that are covered by the CRA, see CRS Report R45248, The Congressional Review Act: Determining Which "Rules" Must Be Submitted to Congress, by Valerie C. Brannon and Maeve P. Carey.

⁶⁷ As explained by one Senator, "Based on Senate precedent, my understanding is that the publication of the GAO legal opinion in today's Record will start the 'clock' for congressional review under the provisions of the CRA." Statement of Senator Ron Wyden, Congressional Record, daily edition, vol. 165 (July 17, 2019), p. S4901. For additional examples of GAO opinions published in the Congressional Record, see Congressional Record, daily edition, vol. 163 (October 24, 2017), p.S6760; Congressional Record, daily edition, vol. 163 (November 27, 2017), p.S7330; and Congressional Record, daily edition, vol. 158 (September 10, 2012), p.S6047.

⁶⁸ For a discussion of these periods and their triggers, see "How Do I Introduce a Joint Resolution of Disapproval?" and "What Are the CRA "Fast Track" Procedures?" below.

⁶⁹ See S.J.Res. 57, which was signed into law on May 21, 2018, and became P.L. 115-172. P.L. 115-172 overturned the Bureau of Consumer Financial Protection, Indirect Auto Lending and Compliance with the Equal Credit Opportunity that was not submitted. In all of the other 16 instances in which the CRA has been used to overturn agency actions, the disapproved actions were regulations that were adopted through APA notice-and-comment procedures and submitted to Congress under the CRA.⁷⁰

Congressional Procedures Under the CRA

How Do I Introduce a Joint Resolution of Disapproval?

In most respects, submitting a CRA joint resolution of disapproval is the same as introducing any other House or Senate measure. There is, however, a very specific time period during which a qualifying joint resolution can be submitted, and its text must read exactly as laid out in the law.⁷¹

The receipt of a final rule by Congress begins a period of 60 “days of continuous session” during which any Member of either chamber may submit a joint resolution disapproving the rule under the CRA.⁷² Although not required by the statute, it appears that the Senate has established the additional requirement that the rule be published in the Federal Register (if such publication is required) before a qualifying joint resolution of disapproval may be submitted. Accordingly, for purposes of the act, a rule is practically considered to have been “received by Congress” on the later date of its receipt in the Office of the Speaker of the House, its referral to Senate committee, or its publication in the Federal Register. In calculating “days of continuous session,” every calendar day is counted, including weekends and holidays, and the count is paused only for periods where either chamber (or both) is gone for more than three days—that is, pursuant to the adoption of a concurrent resolution of adjournment. In order to qualify for the special parliamentary procedures of the CRA, a joint disapproval resolution must be submitted during this 60-day period—not before and not after.⁷³

Under Section 802(a) of the act, the text of a CRA joint disapproval resolution is stipulated. It states the matter after the resolving clause must read:

“That Congress disapproves the rule submitted by the ____ relating to ____, and such rule shall have no force or effect.” (The blank spaces being appropriately filled in).

The first blank would identify the agency promulgating the final rule and the second the name of the rule itself.

Can a Joint Resolution of Disapproval Contain a Preamble?⁷⁴

While the CRA procedure does not specifically bar a joint resolution of disapproval from having a preamble, it is believed that including one raises a number of questions about House and Senate consideration of the measure and that, as such, the practice should be avoided. In the Senate, the Act, March 21, 2013, https://files.consumerfinance.gov/f/201303_cfpb_march_-Auto-Finance-Bulletin.pdf.

⁷⁰ For a complete list of the disapproved rules, see Appendix A.

⁷¹ 5 U.S.C. §802(a).

⁷² 5 U.S.C. §802(a).

⁷³ 5 U.S.C. §802(a). It appears that, in some cases, if the deadline for introduction expires when the Senate is in a period of pro forma session, that chamber may permit a qualifying joint resolution to be submitted on the day the Senate returns to regular session. Members and staff are encouraged to consult with the Senate Parliamentarian or his or her assistants to determine the precise deadline for submitting a joint resolution aimed at any specific agency final rule.

⁷⁴ A preamble is a series of “whereas” clauses found before the resolving clause describing the reasons for and intent of a measure.

preamble to a joint resolution is voted on after the passage of the resolution itself and is separately amendable. Would the consideration of a preamble fall under the “fast track” Senate procedures banning amendments and limiting debate? Does the inclusion of a preamble eliminate the privileged status of the measure in the view of either chamber? Because of these and other ambiguities, Members are advised to consult with the House and Senate Parliamentarians to obtain their definitive review of the measure’s text prior to submission. Members may consider laying out the reasons for and intent of a disapproval resolution in ways other than a preamble by, for example, publishing a statement in the Congressional Record upon introduction of the measure or in floor debate.

How Is a Joint Resolution of Disapproval Different from a Bill?

The CRA requires that the disapproval measure be introduced as a joint resolution. Bills and joint resolutions each have traditional uses, but for purposes of the legislative process, the two types of legislation are generally interchangeable. In order to be enacted, a bill or joint resolution has to pass the House and Senate with identical text in both chambers and be signed by the President, enacted over his veto, or become law without his signature.⁷⁵

Can a Joint Resolution of Disapproval Be Used to Invalidate Part of a Rule or More Than One Rule?

No. Each CRA joint resolution of disapproval can be used to invalidate only a single final rule in its entirety.⁷⁶

What Are the CRA “Fast Track” Procedures?

The CRA contains “fast track” procedures (sometimes called “expedited parliamentary procedures”) for both committee consideration and floor consideration of a CRA disapproval resolution in the Senate.⁷⁷

The CRA does not contain “fast track” procedures for committee and initial floor consideration of a joint resolution of disapproval in the House. In every case in which the House has considered a CRA disapproval resolution on the floor, it has done so under the terms of a closed special rule reported by the Rules Committee and adopted by the House.⁷⁸ When considered under the terms of a special rule, the House minority leader or his or her designee is guaranteed the opportunity to offer a motion to recommit the joint resolution, with or without instructions.⁷⁹ The CRA also provides expedited procedures that govern the consideration by either the House or Senate of a disapproval resolution received from the other chamber.

⁷⁵ Constitutional amendments are traditionally introduced as joint resolutions, but are not presented to the President following passage in Congress.

⁷⁶ See 5 U.S.C. §802(a) (requiring the text of a CRA resolution of disapproval to cite a rule in its entirety).

⁷⁷ 5 U.S.C. §802(c), (d).

⁷⁸ When a measure is considered under the terms of a closed special rule, no floor amendments are in order.

⁷⁹ A motion to recommit the joint resolution with amendatory instructions would technically have to be germane to the text of the joint resolution. The same is true of any amendment proposed to the measure in House committee markup. Drafting a germane motion may be difficult or impossible to achieve in practice in that any amendment would change the stipulated text of the measure.

What Are the CRA “Fast Track” Procedures for Senate Committee Consideration?

Any time after the expiration of a 20-calendar-day period that begins after a final rule is received by Congress and published in the Federal Register (if it is required to be published), a Senate committee can be discharged from the further consideration of a CRA joint resolution disapproving the rule.⁸⁰ This discharge occurs upon the filing on the Senate floor of a petition signed by at least 30 Senators.⁸¹ While the act does not specify the text of a CRA discharge petition, those that have been used in the past resemble a cloture petition. For example

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with chapter 8 of title 5, United States Code, hereby direct that the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation be discharged of further consideration of S.J. Res. 6, a resolution on providing for congressional disapproval of a rule submitted by the Federal Communications Commission relating to the matter of preserving the open Internet and broadband industry practices, and, further, that the resolution be immediately placed upon the Legislative Calendar under General Orders.⁸²

What Are the CRA “Fast Track” Procedures for Senate Floor Consideration?

Once a CRA joint resolution of disapproval is reported or the committee of jurisdiction discharged, any Senator may make a nondebatable motion to proceed to consider the disapproval resolution on the floor.⁸³ This motion to proceed requires a simple majority for adoption. If the motion to proceed is successful, the CRA disapproval resolution would be pending and subject to up to 10 hours of debate.⁸⁴ A nondebatable motion to limit debate below 10 hours is in order. No amendments are permitted.⁸⁵ Upon the using or yielding back of the allotted time, the Senate would vote on the measure. A CRA disapproval resolution requires a simple majority in order to pass. Because the measure is debate-limited, cloture (and its accompanying requirement for supermajority support) is not necessary.

The CRA “fast track” procedures governing the each chamber’s consideration of a joint resolution of disapproval are considered to be rules of the House and Senate, despite being enacted in law. As such, the chambers may suspend these rules in whole or in part by unanimous consent, suspension of the rules, or special rule.

For How Long Are the “Fast Track” Procedures Available?

In order to be eligible for the “fast track” procedures for Senate consideration, that body has to act on a disapproval resolution during a period of 60 days of Senate session that begins when the rule is received by Congress and published in the Federal Register (if it is required to be published). After this “action” period, the measure would have to be considered under normal Senate rules.

⁸⁰ 5 U.S.C. §802(c). It is important to note that the 20-day period after which a discharge petition may be presented in the Senate is calculated from the receipt and publication of the rule, not from the submission of a disapproval resolution aimed at the rule.

⁸¹ 5 U.S.C. §802(c).

⁸² Congressional Record, daily edition, vol. 157 (November 3, 2011), p. S7141.

⁸³ 5 U.S.C. §802(d)(1). The motion to proceed to consider contained in the CRA, like the motion to proceed to consider, contained in the standing rules of the Senate, can be made by any Senator. In practice, however, with rare exception, Senators generally defer to the majority leader or his or her designee to make such scheduling motions or consult closely with him or her on the timing of such actions.

⁸⁴ 5 U.S.C. §802(d)(2).

⁸⁵ 5 U.S.C. §802(d)(2).

There is no deadline in the CRA on House consideration. The House can presumably act on the joint resolution at any point during the life of the two-year Congress.

Do Disapproval Resolutions Have to Be Submitted in Both Chambers of Congress?

No. The CRA does not technically require that “companion” disapproval resolutions be submitted in both the House and Senate. Under certain circumstances, however, doing so may be procedurally or politically desirable.

Under the terms of the CRA “fast track” procedure, if one chamber receives a disapproval resolution passed by the other chamber, the receiving chamber may take up and debate its own disapproval resolution but, at the point of disposition, is to take the final vote not on its own measure but on the disapproval resolution received from the other house. This automatic “hookup” provision guarantees that both chambers are acting on the same joint resolution, and, as such, it can be sent directly to the President following second-chamber passage. The mechanism also ensures that there will be no need to resolve legislative differences between the chambers even in cases where the House and Senate disapproval resolutions have slightly different texts.⁸⁶

If the House passes a joint resolution of disapproval, for example, and messages it to the Senate, the House measure would automatically be placed on the Calendar of Business. The Senate could then directly consider the House measure under the fast track procedures without first taking up its own disapproval resolution.⁸⁷ If the Senate acts first, the joint resolution would be held at the desk in the House. The House could take up the received Senate measure, should it choose to do so, under its normal parliamentary mechanisms without having a companion resolution submitted in the House.

Having disapproval resolutions submitted in both chambers, however, would preserve the option of having either chamber act first.⁸⁸ Submitting companion measures might also be desirable from a political standpoint in that having a designated champion of the issue in each chamber might be viewed as increasing support for its passage and increasing the visibility of the issue.

What Happens If Congress Adjourns Before the CRA Initiation or Action Periods Conclude?

If, within 60 days of session in the Senate or 60 legislative days in the House after the receipt by Congress of a rule,⁸⁹ Congress adjourns its annual session sine die, the periods to submit and act on a disapproval resolution “reset” in their entirety in the next session of Congress.⁹⁰ This mechanism is sometimes referred to as the CRA “lookback” period.

⁸⁶ While, as discussed, the CRA stipulates the text of the joint resolution after the resolving clause, it is possible that each chamber could submit companion resolutions which have filled in the “blanks” in the stipulated text with slightly different language.

⁸⁷ 5 U.S.C. §802(f).

⁸⁸ It is also possible, at least theoretically, that a joint resolution disapproving an agency final rule could be viewed as a revenue-affecting measure, necessitating that the resolution presented to the President originate in the House.

⁸⁹ A legislative day begins when the House or Senate reconvenes following an adjournment (of whatever length) and concludes when that chamber next adjourns.

⁹⁰ 5 U.S.C. §801(d)(1).

In the new session, the reset periods begin on the 15th day of session in the Senate and the 15th legislative day in the House. If the new session is the second session of the same Congress, a disapproval resolution submitted in the first session remains available for expedited action in the Senate during its new action period of 60 days of session.⁹¹ This “lookback” provision is intended to ensure that Congress will have the full periods contemplated by the act to disapprove a rule regardless of when it is submitted.⁹²

Is It Possible to Ascertain When the Periods for Submission, Discharge, and Action on a Resolution to Disapprove a Given Rule Begin and End?

Yes. CRS can provide congressional clients with unofficial estimates of the periods to submit, discharge, and act on a joint resolution of disapproval under the CRA once a given rule has been received by Congress and published in the Federal Register. It is important to stress, however, that CRS estimates are always unofficial and nonbinding. The House and Senate Parliamentarians are the sole definitive arbiters of the CRA parliamentary mechanism, including time periods involved, and should be consulted for authoritative guidance on its operation.

Effect of a Resolution of Disapproval

What Is the Effect of Enacting a CRA Joint Resolution of Disapproval?

Enactment of a CRA joint resolution disapproving a rule has two primary effects. First, a rule subject to a disapproval resolution will not take effect if it had not taken effect by the time the disapproval was enacted.⁹³ If a rule has taken effect by the time it is disapproved, it is not to continue in effect and “shall be treated as though such rule had never taken effect.”⁹⁴

Second, the CRA provides that an agency may not reissue the rule in “substantially the same form” or issue a “new rule that is substantially the same” as the disapproved rule “unless the reissued or new rule is specifically authorized by a law enacted after the date of the joint resolution disapproving the original rule.”⁹⁵

When Is a New Rule “Substantially the Same” as a Disapproved Rule?

The CRA does not define the meaning or scope of substantially the same or what criteria should be considered.⁹⁶ Since there is no statutory definition of substantially the same, it may be open to ⁹¹ 5 U.S.C. §801(d)(2)(A).

⁹² For a brief discussion of the mechanics of the “lookback” period, see CRS In Focus IF10023, The Congressional Review Act (CRA), by Maeve P. Carey and Christopher M. Davis.

⁹³ 5 U.S.C. §801(b)(1).

⁹⁴ 5 U.S.C. §801(f).

⁹⁵ 5 U.S.C. §801(b)(2). A CRA disapproval resolution has another related effect in certain circumstances: Where an agency is under a statutory, regulatory, or court-imposed deadline to promulgate a rule, the deadline will be extended for one year from the enactment of the joint resolution of disapproval (5 U.S.C. §803).

⁹⁶ Even the post-enactment legislative history, which is of limited legal value in interpreting a statute, does not shed light on the meaning of substantially the same. Nor is there a particular definition of substantially the same in the U.S.

debate whether a newly issued rule is substantially similar to a disapproved rule. Sameness could be determined by a number of factors and would likely depend on the rule in question.⁹⁷ While the most obvious standard might be comparing the text of the new rule to the disapproved rule, this could in some circumstances result in outcomes that seem contrary to legislative intent—particularly in light of the fact that under the CRA, Congress must disapprove of rules in their entirety. For example, if the legislative history of the joint resolution of disapproval suggests that Congress objected to a specific section of a rule that was ultimately disapproved, would a rule that removed only that language be considered “substantially the same” as the original, even if the text is otherwise the same? If the agency reissued a rule in which it changed one standard listed in the original regulation, would that be “substantially the same”? If it changed the number of categories to which a standard applied, would the rule still be “substantially the same”? These questions, for which no definitive answers are available, highlight the ambiguity in the meaning of substantially the same.

The CRA is also silent on the question of who would make the determination as to whether a new rule is “substantially the same” as a disapproved rule. It is possible that Congress and agencies themselves might be ultimately responsible for making that determination rather than a court. The CRA contains a prohibition on judicial review, stating that “no determination, finding, action, or omission under this chapter shall be subject to judicial review.”⁹⁸ Courts have generally—but not universally—interpreted this provision to mean that they may not consider any claims alleging that an agency has failed to comply with the CRA.⁹⁹ However, some have argued that the question of whether a rule is “substantially the same” is different from other types of questions arising under the CRA because a court would be analyzing the validity of the subsequent rule rather than Congress’s actions reviewing the prior rule.¹⁰⁰ As of yet, no court has ruled on the precise question of whether an agency’s compliance with the “substantially the same” prohibition could be subject to judicial review.¹⁰¹ If a court also believed that the CRA barred judicial review of the question of whether a rule is “substantially the same,” it would likely not reach a decision on the issue of whether to invalidate a reissued rule on the basis that it violates this “substantially the same” prohibition.

Code that would apply to this section. The code contains over 270 provisions that include the terms substantially similar or substantially the same. See, for example, 15 U.S.C. §57a; 26 U.S.C. §§83, 168, 246; 49 U.S.C. §§30141, 30166. At least one other law has prohibited an agency from issuing “substantially similar” regulations, which also remains undefined in the text (Federal Trade Commission Improvements Act of 1980, P.L. 96-252, 94 Stat. 391-92).

⁹⁷ Two scholars have argued that “if a reissued rule has a substantially different cost-benefit equation than the vetoed rule, then it cannot be regarded as ‘substantially similar.’” Adam M. Finkel and Jason W. Sullivan, “A Cost-Benefit Interpretation of the ‘Substantially Similar’ Hurdle in the Congressional Review Act: Can OSHA Ever Utter the E-Word (Ergonomics) Again?,” Administrative Law Review, vol. 63, no. 4 (Fall 2011), p. 710. The authors identify a number of other possible interpretations of substantially the same, including standards that ask whether external conditions have changed, whether the agency has addressed the “specific problems Congress identified,” or whether the agency has “devise[d] a wholly different regulatory approach.” Ibid., p. 734-37.

⁹⁸ 5 U.S.C. §805.

⁹⁹ See “Is There Judicial Review Under the CRA?” below.

¹⁰⁰ Finkel and Sullivan, “A Cost-Benefit Interpretation,” p. 732, footnote 122. See also, for example, Michael J. Cole, “Interpreting the Congressional Review Act: Why the Courts Should Assert Judicial Review, Narrowly Construe ‘Substantially the Same,’ and Decline to Defer to Agencies Under Chevron,” Administrative Law Review, vol. 70, no. 1 (Winter 2018), pp. 53-108.

¹⁰¹ However, as discussed below in “Is There Judicial Review Under the CRA?” some district court opinions nonetheless support the view that a subsequent agency action would be judicially reviewable. See, for example, Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. Zinke, 313 F. Supp. 3d 976, 991 n.89 (D. Alaska 2018).

In sum, if courts continue to bar all judicial challenges under the CRA, Congress would arguably be the arbiter of whether a reissued rule clears the “substantially the same” standard. The agency would provide its initial interpretation of the provision when issuing the subsequent rule if it chooses to reissue the rule. The reissued version would then be subject to disapproval under the CRA again, and Congress could disapprove the rule on the basis of it being too similar to the disapproved version (or for other reasons).

On October 4, 2019, the Trump Administration published a reissued version of a rule that had been struck down under the CRA in 2017.¹⁰² Notably, this was the first time an agency reissued a rule after the original version was disapproved under the CRA—and, to date, it remains the only instance of a reissued rule. The agency explained that in its view, the final rule was not “substantially the same” as the disapproved rule because the new rule had a “substantially different scope and fundamentally different approach.”¹⁰³ The CRA does not require agencies to provide such an explanation when reissuing a rule, but, arguably, it may be in their interest to do so.

What Is the Effect of a CRA Joint Resolution Disapproving an Amendment to a Previously Issued Rule?

Agencies often promulgate rules that substantively amend or make technical corrections to previously issued rules. An amendment to a rule is considered to be a “rule” under the APA and the CRA.¹⁰⁴ If a CRA joint resolution of disapproval were enacted regarding such an amendment, it would prevent the amendment from going into effect or continuing in effect. However, the joint resolution of disapproval would have no effect on the previously existing rule that was being amended.

How Does the CRA Affect the Effective Date of a Rule?

The CRA requires federal agencies to submit their covered rules to both houses of Congress and GAO “before a rule can take effect.”¹⁰⁵ Currently, the APA requires that agencies generally provide a period of at least 30 days after a final rule is published in the Federal Register before the rule becomes effective.¹⁰⁶ As explained above (see “What Happens When a Rule Is Designated as Major?”), the CRA extends that required period for major rules, providing that major rules “shall take effect on the latest of” three possible dates:

1. 60 days after the date that the rule is published in the Federal Register or submitted to Congress, whichever is later;

¹⁰² U.S. Department of Labor, “Federal-State Unemployment Compensation Program; Establishing Appropriate Occupations for Drug Testing of Unemployment Compensation Applicants Under the Middle Class Tax Relief and Job Creation Act of 2012,” 84 Federal Register 53037, October 4, 2019. See also CRS Insight IN10996, Reissued Labor Department Rule Tests Congressional Review Act Ban on Promulgating “Substantially the Same” Rules, by Maeve P. Carey.

¹⁰³ U.S. Department of Labor, “Federal-State Unemployment Compensation Program.”

¹⁰⁴ The APA defines rulemaking as the “agency process for formulating, amending, or repealing a rule.”

¹⁰⁵ 5 U.S.C. §801(a)(1)(A).

¹⁰⁶ 5 U.S.C. §553(d). The APA provides three exceptions to this requirement: “(1) a substantive rule which grants or recognizes an exemption or relieves a restriction; (2) interpretative rules and statements of policy; or (3) as otherwise provided by the agency for good cause found and published with the rule.” If a rule meets one of these conditions, it may become effective immediately (or after a period of less than 30 days).

2. if Congress passes a joint resolution of disapproval and the President vetoes it, the date on which either house of Congress votes and fails to override the veto or 30 session days after the date Congress received the veto, whichever is earlier; or
3. the date the rule would have otherwise taken effect, unless a joint resolution of disapproval is enacted.¹⁰⁷

Non-major rules “shall take effect as otherwise provided by law after submission to Congress.”¹⁰⁸

For certain types of rules, these effective date requirements may not apply. The CRA states that, notwithstanding the provisions outlined above, the following rules will take effect on the date the promulgating agency chooses:

- (1) any rule that establishes, modifies, opens, closes, or conducts a regulatory program for a commercial, recreational, or subsistence activity related to hunting, fishing, or camping, or
- (2) any rule which an agency for good cause finds (and incorporates the finding and a brief statement of reasons therefor in the rule issued) that notice and public procedure thereon are impracticable, unnecessary, or contrary to the public interest.¹⁰⁹

What Happens If a Rule That Is Already Effective Is Overturned?

If a rule has already taken effect, the CRA provides that the rule shall not continue in effect¹¹⁰ and “shall be treated as though such rule had never taken effect.”¹¹¹

Is There Judicial Review Under the CRA?¹¹²

Section 805 of the CRA states, “No determination, finding, action, or omission under this chapter shall be subject to judicial review.”¹¹³ While this provision, on its face, appears to generally bar courts from reviewing legal claims that involve matters relating to the CRA, there has been some debate regarding the precise scope of this prohibition. The scope of this provision is significant because a bar on judicial review means that courts will not weigh in on questions of statutory interpretation or step in to enforce the CRA, leaving resolution of these questions to the political branches. Most courts that have considered Section 805 have interpreted the provision to broadly

¹⁰⁷ 5 U.S.C. §801(a)(3). Under Title 5, Section 801(a)(5), notwithstanding Title 5, Section 801(a)(3), “the effective date of a rule shall not be delayed by operation of this chapter beyond the date on which either House of Congress votes to reject a joint resolution of disapproval under section 802.” Additionally, under Title 5, Section 801(b)(1), a rule “shall not take effect (or continue), if the Congress enacts a joint resolution of disapproval, described under [5 U.S.C. §802], of the rule.”

¹⁰⁸ 5 U.S.C. §801(a)(4).

¹⁰⁹ 5 U.S.C. §808. The “good cause” language in the second category of rules in Section 808 refers to an exception to the notice-and-comment rulemaking requirements of the APA. That exception allows agencies to publish final rules without seeking comments from the public on an earlier proposed rule (5 U.S.C. §553(b)(B)). When agencies invoke this good cause exception, the APA requires that they explicitly say so and provide a rationale for the exception’s use when the rule is published in the Federal Register. A federal agency’s invocation of the APA’s good cause exception is subject to judicial review (see CRS Report R44356, The Good Cause Exception to Notice and Comment Rulemaking: Judicial Review of Agency Action, by Jared P. Cole).

¹¹⁰ 5 U.S.C. §801(b)(1).

¹¹¹ 5 U.S.C. §801(f).

¹¹² This section was authored by Valerie C. Brannon, Legislative Attorney.

¹¹³ 5 U.S.C. §805. “This chapter” refers to the CRA. See 5 U.S.C. §§801 et seq.

prohibit judicial review, but a few rulings have reached contrary conclusions and held that certain types of CRA claims are not barred.¹¹⁴

The majority of courts, including two federal appellate courts, have held that the CRA prohibits courts from reviewing congressional and agency actions for compliance with the CRA and have accordingly dismissed lawsuits alleging that rules are ineffective because agencies failed to submit them as required under the CRA.¹¹⁵ These courts have primarily relied on the plain text of Section 805, noting the broad sweep of the language and lack of any qualifications.¹¹⁶ For example, the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit said in 2009 that the language of Section 805 was “unequivocal” and “denies courts the power to void rules on the basis of agency noncompliance with the Act.”¹¹⁷

But a few federal trial courts have held that while Section 805 may bar adjudication of congressional actions taken pursuant to the CRA, it did not bar courts from reviewing agency action.¹¹⁸ First, a federal trial court in Indiana ruled in 2002 that “Congress only intended to preclude judicial review of Congress’ own determinations, findings, actions, or omissions made under the CRA after a rule has been submitted to it for review.”¹¹⁹ The court noted that a prior district court had ruled otherwise, emphasizing that Section 805 “provides for no judicial review of any ‘determination, finding, action, or omission under this chapter,’ not ‘by Congress under this chapter.’”¹²⁰ The Indiana court disagreed, ruling that prohibiting judicial review of agency action “would be at odds with the purpose of the CRA, which was to provide a check on administrative agencies’ power.”¹²¹ The court also concluded that the text of the statute supported its opinion, noting that Section 805 bars review of a “determination, finding, action, or omission.”¹²² In the court’s view, “agencies do not make findings and determinations under this chapter; Congress, on the other hand,” does.¹²³ Consequently, the court reviewed the plaintiff’s

¹¹⁴ See Cole, “Interpreting the Congressional Review Act,” p. 66.

¹¹⁵ See, for example, Montanans for Multiple Use v. Barbouletos, 568 F.3d 225, 229 (D.C. Cir. 2009); Via Christi Reg'l Med. Ctr. v. Leavitt, 509 F.3d 1259, 1271 n.11 (10th Cir. 2007). See also, for example, Wash. All. of Tech. Workers v. U.S. Dep't of Homeland Sec., 892 F.3d 332, 346 (D.C. Cir. 2018) (dismissing claim alleging that agency improperly published a rule prior to the passage of the CRA’s “mandatory 60-day delay” for major rules).

¹¹⁶ See, for example, Kan. Nat. Res. Coal. v. U.S. Dep't of Interior, 382 F. Supp. 3d 1179, 1182–83 (D. Kan. 2019); United States v. Carlson, Crim. No. 12-305, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 130893, at *43 (D. Minn. July 25, 2013); United States v. Am. Elec. Power Serv. Corp., 218 F. Supp. 2d 931, 949 (S.D. Ohio 2002); Tex. Sav. & Cmty. Bankers Assoc. v. Fed. Hous. Fin. Bd., No. A 97 CA 421 SS, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13470, *27 (W.D. Tex. 1998).

¹¹⁷ Montanans for Multiple Use, 568 F.3d at 229.

¹¹⁸ Tugaw Ranches, LLC v. U.S. Dep't of Interior, 362 F. Supp. 3d 879, 889 (D. Idaho 2019); Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. Zinke, 313 F. Supp. 3d 976, 991 n.89 (D. Alaska 2018); United States v. S. Ind. Gas & Elec. Co., No. IP99-1692-C-M/S, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20936, at *18 (S.D. Ind. Oct. 24, 2002). In two other cases, federal appellate courts enforced the CRA’s 60-day delay for major rules without considering the effect of Title 5, Section 805, of the U.S. Code. NRDC v. Abraham, 355 F.3d 179, 201–02 (2d Cir. 2004); Liesegang v. Sec'y of Veterans Affairs, 312 F.3d 1368, 1376 (Fed. Cir. 2002). In addition, one trial court concluded that a criminal defendant could challenge an agency’s failure to submit an alleged “rule” to Congress because a separate statute—Title 21, Section 811(h) of the U.S. Code—allowed for judicial review. United States v. Reece, 956 F. Supp. 2d 736, 743–44 (W.D. La. 2013).

¹¹⁹ S. Ind. Gas & Elec. Co., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20936, at *13.

¹²⁰ Id. at *12 (quoting Tex. Sav. & Cmty. Bankers Assoc. v. Fed. Hous. Fin. Bd., No. A 97 CA 421 SS, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13470, *27 n.15 (W.D. Tex. 1998), aff'd, 201 F.3d 551 (5th Cir. 2000)).

¹²¹ Id. at *14.

¹²² Id. (quoting 5 U.S.C. §805) (internal quotation mark omitted).

¹²³ Id.

claim that the EPA had violated the CRA by failing to submit a rule—but ultimately rejected the suit on its merits, holding that the EPA was not required to report the action.¹²⁴

Revisiting the question in 2019, an Idaho district court agreed with the Indiana court’s conclusion while noting that most other courts had since rejected that view.¹²⁵ The Idaho court pointed to a post-enactment statement from the CRA’s sponsors.¹²⁶ The sponsors’ statement said that major rule determinations made by OIRA and OMB would not be reviewable and that courts could not review Congress’s compliance with the congressional review procedures.¹²⁷ However, the sponsors also believed that Section 805 “does not bar a court from giving effect to a resolution of disapproval that was enacted into law” and, accordingly, stated that this provision “in no way prohibits a court from determining whether a rule is in effect.”¹²⁸ In the court’s view, this legislative history demonstrated that Congress “understood that actions taken by certain actors would not be reviewable, but that this non-reviewability did not extend to all CRA actors and that specifically agency action would be reviewable.”¹²⁹ In addition, the Idaho court emphasized “general policy concerns,” concluding, “Reading judicial review out of the CRA” and barring judicial enforcement “foils its primary purpose”—to enhance agency accountability.¹³⁰ Consequently, the court held that it had jurisdiction to hear the plaintiff’s suit, claiming that executive branch agencies had violated the CRA by failing to submit alleged rules for review.¹³¹

Another trial court concluded in 2018 that it had jurisdiction over a slightly different type of CRA claim: Among other claims, the plaintiff argued that the rule fell within an exemption to the CRA and therefore should not have been subject to congressional review or disapproval.¹³² The plaintiff asked the court to rule that any agency action based on this disapproval resolution would itself be unlawful.¹³³ The Alaska district court held that Section 805 did not bar review of this claim, noting that the plaintiff was not challenging “the agency’s compliance with the procedures of the CRA” but instead “challenge[d] the fundamental authority of the agency to take the action at issue.”¹³⁴ That is, according to the court, the plaintiff was “not seeking review of action taken under the CRA” but was “claiming that [the agency], at the behest of Congress, acted ultra vires [in excess of its legal authority] in taking action beyond the authority provided by the CRA.”¹³⁵ The court, however, ultimately rejected the plaintiff’s suit on its merits, concluding that the rule was not exempt from the CRA’s review procedures.¹³⁶

¹²⁴ Id. at *29–30.

¹²⁵ Tugaw Ranches, LLC v. U.S. Dep’t of Interior, 362 F. Supp. 3d 879, 884–86 (D. Idaho 2019). However, the court questioned whether this majority view was as predominant as it seemed, noting that only two U.S. Circuit Courts of Appeals had weighed in on the question and saying that “some of the [courts’] references to § 805 were simply in footnotes without any analysis or explanation.” Id. at 885–86.

¹²⁶ Id. at 887.

¹²⁷ Id. (quoting Senators Don Nickles, Harry Reid, and Ted Stevens, Congressional Record, daily edition, vol. 142, [April 18, 1996], p. S3686) (internal quotation marks omitted).

¹²⁸ Id. (quoting Senators Don Nickles, Harry Reid, and Ted Stevens, Congressional Record, daily edition, vol. 142, [April 18, 1996], p. S3686) (internal quotation marks omitted).

¹²⁹ Id. at 888.

¹³⁰ Id. at 888–89.

¹³¹ Id. at 889.

¹³² Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. Zinke, 313 F. Supp. 3d 976, 990 (D. Alaska 2018).

¹³³ Id. at 980.

¹³⁴ Id. at 991 n.89.

¹³⁵ Id.

¹³⁶ Id. at 992.

It is likely that the scope of the CRA's bar on judicial review will be subject to further litigation, and the emerging majority view interpreting this prohibition broadly could shift. And as discussed above,¹³⁷ there is very little case law interpreting Section 805 in the context of judicial review of agency action subsequent to a disapproval resolution. Some have argued that even if Section 805 prohibits judicial review in circumstances where Congress has not acted to disapprove a rule, if a joint resolution of disapproval has been enacted, courts should be able to review whether a reissued agency rule is substantially similar to a disapproved rule.¹³⁸

What Other Tools Are Available to Congress for Conducting Oversight of Federal Regulations?

Although the CRA offers a number of advantages to Congress, as discussed above, Congress also has many other tools available to conduct oversight of federal agency rulemaking.¹³⁹ These tools include general legislative powers, oversight hearings, meetings with agency officials, and appropriations language. Each of these is briefly discussed below.

Every rule issued by a federal agency must be based upon a grant of authority given to that agency by Congress in statute,¹⁴⁰ and it is Congress's prerogative to ensure that agencies issue rules in a manner consistent with congressional intent. As such, Congress can use its legislative power to oversee the issuance and implementation of rules or to require that an agency repeal a rule. For example, Congress can make a change to the underlying statute authorizing a rule or enact legislation that simply overrides the rule. Such a change could remove or change the agency's authority to issue the rule, or it could prescribe more specifically in law what the rule should contain. The advantage of using the CRA is that the procedures it provides for, particularly in the Senate, can make it easier to pass a joint resolution of disapproval than to pass a regular bill. However, as discussed, Members must submit and act on a CRA resolution of disapproval within a particular time period following issuance of a rule, whereas Congress can use its general legislative power to act on a rule at any time.

Hearings are another method of conducting oversight of federal rules. Congressional committees can hold oversight hearings at any time that focus on the development or implementation of a particular rule or set of rules that fall under their jurisdiction. Oversight hearings can give Members a chance to directly ask agency officials questions about rules and communicate their views to agency officials.

A Member of Congress can also request a meeting with the rulemaking agency while a rule is under development to communicate his or her views to the agency. In addition, a Member can request to meet with OIRA, the entity within OMB that reviews most agency regulations prior to their publication. Such meetings are sometimes referred to as "12866 meetings," a reference to ¹³⁷ See "When Is a New Rule "Substantially the Same" as a Disapproved Rule?" above.

¹³⁸ See, for example, Cole, "Interpreting the Congressional Review Act," p. 68; Finkel and Sullivan, "A Cost-Benefit Interpretation," p. 732 fn. 122.

¹³⁹ For a more detailed discussion of oversight tools that are available to Congress, see CRS Report RL30240, Congressional Oversight Manual. See also CRS Report R45442, Congress's Authority to Influence and Control Executive Branch Agencies, by Todd Garvey and Daniel J. Sheffner.

¹⁴⁰ See, for example, Bowen v. Georgetown Univ. Hosp., 488 U.S. 204, 208 (1988) ("It is axiomatic that an administrative agency's power to promulgate legislative regulations is limited to the authority delegated by Congress.").

Executive Order 12866, which governs OIRA review of agency rulemaking.¹⁴¹ During the review process, OIRA can play a significant role in the content of a proposed or final rule.¹⁴² Therefore, Members may want to make their views known to OIRA while the rule is under review.

Finally, Congress has frequently used appropriations legislation to restrict an agency's use of funds to promulgate or implement particular regulations.¹⁴³ However, unlike CRA joint resolutions of disapproval, provisions of this type do not nullify an existing regulation, nor do they remove the agency's underlying statutory authority to issue a regulation. Therefore, any final rule that has taken effect will continue to be binding law—even if an appropriations restriction prohibits the agency from using funds to enforce the rule. In addition, restrictions on the use of funds in appropriations acts, unless otherwise specified, are binding only for the period of time covered by the measure (i.e., a fiscal year or a portion of a fiscal year). In these instances, any restriction that is not repeated in the next relevant appropriations act or enacted as part of another measure no longer binds the relevant agency or agencies.¹⁴⁴

¹⁴¹ Executive Order 12866, "Regulatory Planning and Review."

¹⁴² For more information about the role of OIRA review in the rulemaking process, see CRS Report RL32397, Federal Rulemaking: The Role of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs, coordinated by Maeve P. Carey.

¹⁴³ For example, Congress used appropriations legislation to delay the issuance of the ergonomics rule that was later overturned using the CRA. Such provisions were put into place after the Occupational Safety and Health Administration issued the proposed rule in 1995 and expired on September 30, 1998. See, for example, P.L. 104-134, which contained the following provision: "None of the funds made available in this Act may be used by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration to promulgate or issue any proposed or final standard regarding ergonomic protection before September 30, 1998." See also Julie A. Parks, "Comment: Lessons in Politics: Initial Use of the Congressional Review Act," Administrative Law Review, vol. 55 (2003), pp. 192-94.

¹⁴⁴ Rules in each chamber restrict the use of provisions in appropriations bills that include language causing them to be effective for more than one fiscal year or permanently (e.g., the use of the term hereafter or other words of futurity). For additional information on the use of appropriations language to control agency actions, see CRS Report R41634, Limitations in Appropriations Measures: An Overview of Procedural Issues, by James V. Saturno.

Appendix A. Rules Overturned Using the Congressional Review Act

Through January 9, 2020

Department and/or Agency Issuing Rule	Cong.	Title of Rule	Date Rule Was Published Federal Register Citation	Public Law Number Date Enacted
Department of Labor, Occupational Safety and Health Administration	107 th (2001-2002)	Ergonomics Program	November 14, 2000 65 F.R. 68261	P.L. 107-5 March 20, 2001
Securities and Exchange Commission	115 th (2017-2018)	Disclosure of Payments by Resource Extraction Issuers	July 27, 2016 81 F.R. 49359	P.L. 115-4 February 14, 2017
Department of the Interior, Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement	115 th (2017-2018)	Stream Protection Rule	December 20, 2016 81 F.R. 93066	P.L. 115-5 February 16, 2017
Social Security Administration	115 th (2017-2018)	Implementation of the NICS Improvement Amendments Act of 2007	December 19, 2016 81 F.R. 91702	P.L. 115-8 February 28, 2017
Department of Defense; General Services Administration; and National Aeronautics and Space Administration	115 th (2017-2018)	Federal Acquisition Regulation; Fair Pay and Safe Workplaces	August 25, 2016 81 F.R. 58562	P.L. 115-11 March 27, 2017
Department of the Interior, Bureau of Land Management	115 th (2017-2018)	Resource Management Planning	December 12, 2016 81 F.R. 89580	P.L. 115-12 March 27, 2017
Department of Education, Office of Elementary and Secondary Education	115 th (2017-2018)	Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as Amended by the Every Student Succeeds Act-Accountability and State Plans	November 29, 2016 81 F.R. 86076	P.L. 115-13 March 27, 2017
Department of Education, Office of Postsecondary Education	115 th (2017-2018)	Teacher Preparation Issues	October 31, 2016 81 F.R. 75494	P.L. 115-14 March 27, 2017
Department of Labor, Employment and Training Administration	115 th (2017-2018)	Federal-State Unemployment Compensation Program; Middle Class Tax Relief and Job Creation Act of 2012 Provision on Establishing Appropriate Occupations for Drug Testing of Unemployment Compensation Applicants	August 1, 2016 81 F.R. 50298	P.L. 115-17 March 31, 2017

Department and/or Agency Issuing Rule	Cong.	Title of Rule	Date Rule Was Published Federal Register Citation	Public Law Number Date Enacted
Department of the Interior, Fish and Wildlife Service	115 th (2017-2018)	Non-Subsistence Take of Wildlife, and Public Participation and Closure Procedures, on National Wildlife Refuges in Alaska	August 5, 2016 81 F.R. 52247	P.L. 115-20 April 3, 2017
Department of Labor, Occupational Safety and Health Administration	115 th (2017-2018)	Clarification of Employer's Continuing Obligation to Make and Maintain an Accurate Record of Each Recordable Injury and Illness	December 19, 2016 81 F.R. 91792	P.L. 115-21 April 3, 2017
Federal Communications Commission	115 th (2017-2018)	Protecting the Privacy of Customers of Broadband and Other Telecommunications Services	December 2, 2016 81 F.R. 87274	P.L. 115-22 April 3, 2017
Department of Health and Human Services, Office of Population Affairs, Office of the Secretary	115 th (2017-2018)	Compliance with Title X Requirements by Project Recipients in Selecting Subrecipients	December 19, 2016 81 F.R. 91852	P.L. 115-23 April 13, 2017
Department of Labor, Employee Benefits Security Administration	115 th (2017-2018)	Savings Arrangements Established by Qualified State Political Subdivisions for Non-Governmental Employees	December 20, 2016 81 F.R. 92639	P.L. 115-24 April 13, 2017
Department of Labor, Employee Benefits Security Administration	115 th (2017-2018)	Savings Arrangements Established by States for Non-Governmental Employees	August 30, 2016 81 F.R. 59464	P.L. 115-35 May 17, 2017
Bureau of Consumer Financial Protection	115 th (2017-2018)	Arbitration Agreements	July 19, 2017 82 F.R. 33210	P.L. 115-74 November 1, 2017
Bureau of Consumer Financial Protection	115 th (2017-2018)	Indirect Auto Lending and Compliance with the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (CFPB Bulletin 2013-02)	March 21, 2013 N/A	P.L. 115-172 May 21, 2018

Source: Congressional Research Service, using information from the Federal Register and <http://www.congress.gov>.

Appendix B. Government Accountability Office (GAO) Opinions on Whether Certain Agency Actions Are “Rules” Under the CRA

Table Lists GAO Opinions on Actions not Submitted to Congress, 1996—January 9, 2020

Agency Action	GAO Citation	Date	Requested By	GAO Determination
Department of Agriculture memorandum concerning the Emergency Salvage Timber Sale Program	B-274505	September 16, 1996	Senator Larry Craig	Agency action is a rule under the CRA.
U.S. Forest Service Tongass National Forest Land and Resource Management Plan	B-275178	July 3, 1997	Senator Ted Stevens Senator Frank Murkowski Representative Don Young	Agency action is a rule under the CRA.
American Heritage River Initiative, created by Executive Order 13061	B-278224	November 10, 1997	Senator Conrad Burns	Action is not a rule under the CRA because the President is not an agency under the CRA.
Environmental Protection Agency “Interim Guidance for Investigating Title VI Administrative Complaints Challenging Permits”	B-281575	January 20, 1999	Representative David McIntosh	Agency action is a rule under the CRA.
Farm Credit Administration national charter initiative	B-286338	October 17, 2000	Representative James Leach	Agency action is a rule under the CRA.
Department of the Interior Record of Decision “Trinity River Mainstem Fishery Restoration”	B-287557	May 14, 2001	Representative Doug Ose	Agency action is a rule under the CRA.
Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) memorandum regarding the VA’s marketing activities to enroll new veterans in the VA health care system	B-291906	February 28, 2003	Representative Ted Strickland	Agency action is not a rule under the CRA because it falls under the exception in 5 U.S.C. §804(3)(C).
Department of Veterans Affairs memorandum terminating Vendee Loan Program	B-292045	May 19, 2003	Representative Lane Evans	Agency action is not a rule under the CRA because it falls under the exception in 5 U.S.C. §804(3)(B) or (C).
Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services Letter on the State Children’s Health Insurance Program	B-316048	April 17, 2008	Senator John D. Rockefeller, IV Senator Olympia Snowe	Agency action is a rule under the CRA.

Agency Action	GAO Citation	Date	Requested By	GAO Determination
Department of Health and Human Services Information Memorandum concerning the Temporary Assistance to Needy Families Program	B-323772	September 4, 2012	Senator Orrin Hatch Representative Dave Camp	Agency action is a rule under the CRA.
Environmental Protection Agency proposed rule on Standards of Performance for Greenhouse Gas Emissions from New Stationary Sources: Electric Utility Generating Units	B-325553	May 29, 2014	Senator Mitch McConnell	Agency action is not a rule because “the precedent provided in our prior opinions underscores that proposed rules are not rules for CRA purposes, and GAO has no role with respect to them.”
Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, Federal Reserve Board, and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Interagency Guidance on Leveraged Lending	B-329272	October 19, 2017	Senator Pat Toomey	Agency action is a rule under the CRA.
U.S. Forest Service 2016 Amendment to the Tongass Land and Resource Management Plan	B-238859	October 23, 2017	Senator Lisa Murkowski	Agency action is a rule under the CRA.
Bureau of Land Management Eastern Interior Resource Management Plan	B-329065	November 15, 2017	Senator Lisa Murkowski	Agency action is a rule under the CRA.
Consumer Financial Protection Bureau bulletin on Indirect Auto Lending and Compliance with the Equal Credit Opportunity Act	B-329129	December 5, 2017	Senator Pat Toomey	Agency action is a rule under the CRA.
U.S. Agency for International Development fact sheet on global health assistance and revisions to standard provisions for U.S. nongovernmental organizations	B-329206	May 1, 2018	Senator Jeanne Shaheen Senator Benjamin Cardin Senator Richard Blumenthal Senator Patty Murray Representative Nita M. Lowey Representative Diana DeGette Representative Eliot L. Engel Representative Barbara Lee	Agency actions are not rules under the CRA because “federal courts have held that agencies’ implementation of presidential policy-making does not constitute a rule.”

Agency Action	GAO Citation	Date	Requested By	GAO Determination
Internal Revenue Service statement on health care reporting requirements	B-329916	May 17, 2018	Representative Mark Meadows	Agency action is not a rule under the CRA because it falls under the exception in Title 5, Section 804(3)(C), of the U.S. Code.
Social Security Administration Hearings, Appeals, and Litigation Law Manual (“HALLEX”)	B-329926	September 10, 2018	Representative Jason Smith	Agency action is not a rule under the CRA because it falls under the exception in Title 5, Section 804(3)(C), of the U.S. Code.
Internal Revenue Service Revenue Procedure 2018-38	B-330376	November 30, 2018	Senator Orrin Hatch	Agency action is eligible for review under the CRA “because IRS submitted the revenue procedure as a rule” and “IRS’s submission triggered Congress’s review and oversight powers under CRA.”
Department of Justice memorandum to federal prosecutors along the southwest border of the United States	B-330190	December 19, 2018	Senator Edward Markey	Agency action is not a rule under the CRA because it falls under the exception in Title 5, Section 804(3)(C), of the U.S. Code.
Department of Commerce memorandum regarding a citizenship question on the 2020 Census	B-330288	February 7, 2019	Senator Brian Schatz	Agency action is not a rule under the CRA because “it was not designed to implement, interpret, or prescribe law or policy.”
Departments of Health and Human Services and Treasury guidance entitled “State Relief and Empowerment Waivers”	B-330811	July 15, 2019	Senator Ron Wyden Representative Frank Pallone Jr.	Agency action is a rule under the CRA.
Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System Supervision and Regulation Letters 12-17, 14-8, 15-7	B-330843	October 22, 2019	Senator Thom Tillis Senator Mike Crapo Senator David Perdue Senator Michael Rounds Senator Kevin Cramer	Two of the three agency actions (SR Letters 12-17 and 14-8) are rules under the CRA. The third agency action (SR Letter 15-7) is not a rule under the CRA because it falls under the exception in Title 5, Section 804(3)(C), of the U.S. Code.

Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System Supervision and Regulation Letter 11-7	B-331324	October 22, 2019	Senator Thom Thillis	Agency action is a rule under the CRA.
---	----------	------------------	----------------------	--

Source: Congressional Research Service. Opinions are available on the GAO website at https://www.gao.gov/legal/other-legal-work/congressional-review-act#legal_opinions.

Notes: This table lists agency actions for which Members of Congress asked GAO's opinion as to whether the action falls under the definition of rule under the CRA. For a more in-depth discussion of this issue and for summaries of each of the opinions listed in this table, see CRS Report R45248, The Congressional Review Act: Determining Which "Rules" Must Be Submitted to Congress, by Valerie C. Brannon and Maeve P. Carey.

Author Contact Information

Maeve P. Carey
Specialist in Government Organization and Management
[redacted]@crs.loc.gov....

Christopher M. Davis
Analyst on Congress and the Legislative Process
[redacted]@crs.loc.gov...

Acknowledgments

Questions from congressional clients regarding legal issues addressed in this report may be directed to Valerie C. Brannon, Legislative Attorney, who contributed to portions of this report.

EveryCRSReport.com

The Congressional Research Service (CRS) is a federal legislative branch agency, housed inside the Library of Congress, charged with providing the United States Congress non-partisan advice on issues that may come before Congress.

EveryCRSReport.com republishes CRS reports that are available to all Congressional staff. The reports are not classified, and Members of Congress routinely make individual reports available to the public.

Prior to our republication, we redacted phone numbers and email addresses of analysts who produced the reports. We also added this page to the report. We have not intentionally made any other changes to any report published on EveryCRSReport.com.

CRS reports, as a work of the United States government, are not subject to copyright protection in the United States. Any CRS report may be reproduced and distributed in its entirety without permission from CRS. However, as a CRS report may include copyrighted images or material from a third party, you may need to obtain permission of the copyright holder if you wish to copy or otherwise use copyrighted material.

Information in a CRS report should not be relied upon for purposes other than public understanding of information that has been provided by CRS to members of Congress in connection with CRS' institutional role.

EveryCRSReport.com is not a government website and is not affiliated with CRS. We do not claim copyright on any CRS report we have republished.