Service-Contingent Federal Student Loan Forgiveness and Loan Repayment Programs

Student loan forgiveness and loan repayment programs enable borrowers to have all or part of their student loan debt forgiven or repaid on their behalf if they meet specified eligibility criteria. A primary type of such programs provides benefits to borrowers who complete work or service in specific fields or professions. These service-contingent student loan forgiveness and loan repayment programs are typically intended to provide a financial incentive to encourage individuals to enter public service or a particular profession, occupation, or occupational specialty, or to remain employed in a high-need profession or occupation (often in certain locations).

The number and availability of service-contingent loan forgiveness and loan repayment programs have expanded considerably since the establishment of the first major federal loan forgiveness program under the National Defense Education Act of 1958. Currently, federal law authorizes at least 46 such programs, approximately 30 of which were became operational on October 1, 2021, or became operational sometime thereafter. This report provides information on the characteristics and funding of these various programs. For more detailed information on each of these programs, along with a discussion of overarching program design features and policy issues associated with them, see CRS Report R43571, Federal Student Loan Forgiveness and Loan Repayment Programs (archived).

Loan forgiveness benefits may also be available to certain federal student loan borrowers following a prolonged period during which their student loan debt burden is high relative to their income. These benefits are provided by various student loan income-driven repayment plans. Certain other federal student loan borrowers may be relieved of the responsibility to repay all or part of their loan debt via a loan discharge, which is typically available to borrowers based on a borrower's hardship (e.g., total and permanent disability, bankruptcy). These types of benefits are not discussed in this report. For additional information on student loan income-driven repayment plans and loan discharge options, see CRS Report R45931, Federal Student Loans Made Through the William D. Ford Federal Direct Loan Program: Terms and Conditions for Borrowers.

Currently, federal law authorizes at least 46 programs to enable borrowers to have all or part of their student loan debt forgiven or repaid on their behalf in exchange for the borrower's completion of specified work or service; approximately 30 of these authorized programs were operational on or after October 1, 2021, or became operational sometime thereafter.¹ These service-contingent student loan forgiveness and loan repayment programs are typically intended to provide a financial incentive to encourage individuals to enter public service or a particular profession, occupation, or occupational specialty, or to remain employed in a high-need profession or occupation (often in certain locations). Each of the programs has unique characteristics in terms of their service requirements, benefit amounts, administrative structures, and program funding.

While all of these service-contingent student loan forgiveness or student loan repayment programs provide student loan debt relief benefits based on a borrower's completion of specified service, a primary distinction among these programs is whether they are considered a loan forgiveness or a loan repayment program. In general, loan forgiveness benefits are broadly available to borrowers of qualified loans, and the availability of the benefits is expressed to borrowers in their loan documents (e.g., in a master promissory note).² A borrower who satisfies the loan forgiveness program's eligibility criteria, as set forth in the loan terms and conditions, is entitled to the loan forgiveness benefits. Benefits that are entitlements to qualified borrowers are generally funded through mandatory appropriations and accounted for as part of federal student loan subsidy costs.

In contrast, under a loan repayment program, the entity that administers the program typically either directly repays some or all of the qualified borrower's student loan debt on the borrower's behalf or provides funding to a separate entity for purposes of implementing a loan repayment program and making such payments. Loan repayment benefits are generally offered through programs that are separate or distinct from the program through which a federal student loan is made and are generally available to a limited number of qualified borrowers. Typically, the availability of loan repayment benefits is subject to the discretionary appropriation of funds.

The number and availability of service-contingent loan forgiveness and loan repayment programs have expanded considerably since the establishment of the first major federal loan forgiveness program under the National Defense Education Act of 1958. As noted above, currently, 46 such programs are authorized at the federal level, and approximately 30 of these authorized programs were operational on October 1, 2021, or became operational sometime thereafter. The tables in this report provide information on the characteristics and funding of these various programs. For more detailed information on each of these programs, along with a discussion of overarching program design features and policy issues associated with them, see CRS Report R43571, Federal Student Loan Forgiveness and Loan Repayment Programs (archived).

Loan forgiveness benefits may also be available to certain federal student loan borrowers following a prolonged period during which their student loan debt burden is high relative to their income. These benefits are provided by various student loan income-driven repayment plans. Certain other federal student loan borrowers may be relieved of the responsibility to repay all or part of their loan debt via a loan discharge, which is typically available to borrowers based on a borrower's hardship (e.g., total and permanent disability, bankruptcy). These types of benefits are not discussed in this report. For additional information on student loan income-driven repayment plans and loan discharge options, see CRS Report R45931, Federal Student Loans Made Through the William D. Ford Federal Direct Loan Program: Terms and Conditions for Borrowers.

This report provides information on federally authorized service-contingent student loan forgiveness and repayment programs in two tables. Table 1 lists programs that were operational on or after October 1, 2021. Table 2 lists such programs that were previously operational prior to October 1, 2021; that were never active; or for which program information is unavailable. Both tables contain the following information:

- program name,
- statutory citation,
- administering agency,
- qualifying service required of program participants,
- maximum amount of benefits program participants can receive,
- most recently available data regarding the amount of funds appropriated for the program or the amount of benefits awarded under the program, and
- resources for additional information.

In general, both tables are organized by sequential U.S. Code citation. In Table 1, information on student loan forgiveness programs is presented first, followed by information on student loan repayment programs.

- b. Figure includes $13,387,606,000 in loans forgiven between October 2021 and October 2022 under ED's Limited PSLF Waiver. In October 2021, ED announced the waiver, which was a series of limited-time waivers of numerous PSLF program rules available to borrowers through October 31, 2022, and implemented in response to the COVID-19 pandemic. The waivers were intended to enable borrowers to receive credit for past periods of repayment that would not otherwise qualify for PSLF.

- g. The STRONG Veterans Act of 2022 (Division V of the Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2023 (P.L. 117-328)) requires that beginning in FY2022, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs provide at least 200 program awards for the purposes of recruiting "mental health professionals to the Department of Veterans Affairs in disciplines that include psychiatry, psychology, advanced practice nursing (with a focus on mental health or substance abuse disorder), and social work.
- h. The Program for the Repayment of Educational Loans was established as a pilot program, and its authorization expired in FY2019. However, there are currently two program awardees who applied prior to the expiration of the program's authorization and who are currently completing their service obligations. They will continue to receive program benefits for the remainder of their service obligation.
- i. The Specialty Education Debt Reduction Program was first implemented in April 2021. The VA anticipates an increase in participation and costs as the program matures. For FY2024, the VA requested an appropriation of $12 million for the program.
- j. Recipients must also have educational loans that are more than 20% of their annual federal salary and must be accepted into one of the five CDC fellowship programs: the Epidemic Intelligence Service, Laboratory Leadership Service, Prevention Effectiveness Fellowship, Public Health Informatics Fellowship, and the Future Leaders in Infections and Global Health Threats Fellowship.

- k. These repayment benefits were made using funds appropriated from the American Rescue Plan (P.L. 117-2). For more information, see CRS Report R46834, American Rescue Plan Act of 2021 (P.L. 117-2): Public Health, Medical Supply Chain, Health Services, and Related Provisions.

- m. Qualifying borrowers must also be from an economically or environmentally disadvantaged background.
- n. Includes amounts appropriated for the Nurse Corp Scholarship program and the Nurse Corps Loan Repayment program.
- o. Segal Education award funds may be used for student loan repayment or for qualified higher educational expenses at the discretion of the recipient. CNCS is authorized to transfer additional amounts from AmeriCorps State and National Grants programs funds to support activities of national service participants, including education awards. Additionally, FEMA makes a contribution to support FEMA Corps (a component of AmeriCorps National Civilian Community Corps) participants' education awards.

Source: CRS analysis of relevant statutes, regulations, and program materials.

- a. Previously active programs are those that CRS can confirm operated at some point in time prior to October 1, 2020, and for which CRS can either verify that they are no longer operational or for which CRS cannot verify that they are currently operational.
- b. Amount repaid to individuals serving in the Air National Guard. As of FY2020, the benefit is no longer being offered.
- c. Recipients must also have educational loans that are more than 20% of their annual federal salary.
- d. A program is considered never to have been active if it has been authorized but has not yet received appropriations.
- e. Despite the program's name (Loan Forgiveness in Service in Areas of National Need), this is classified as a loan repayment program (and not a loan forgiveness program) because its benefits are contingent on discretionary appropriations.
- f. Specified areas of national need include early childhood educator; nurse; foreign language specialist; librarian; highly qualified teacher; child welfare worker; speech-language pathologist or audiologist; school counselor; public sector employee in public safety, emergency management, public health, or public interest legal services; nutrition professional; medical specialist; mental health professional; dentist; employee in the science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (STEM) fields; physical therapist; superintendent, principal, or other (school) administrator; occupational therapist; and allied health professional.
- g. Programs for which information is unavailable are those that CRS cannot confirm their operational status because there is no available information on which to make such a determination.
