

Cambodia

Overview: U.S.-Cambodia Relations

U.S.-Cambodia relations have become strained during the past decade, after former Prime Minister Hun Sen banned the main opposition party in 2017 and as Cambodia's relationship with the People's Republic of China (PRC) has grown closer. The U.S. government has sought to remain engaged with Cambodia while calling on the Cambodian government to restore democratic rights and resist PRC influence. In 2017, the Cambodian government suspended the annual U.S.-Cambodia military exercise Angkor Sentinel, first held in 2010. In 2018, the U.S. government suspended military assistance to Cambodia in response to its government's suppression of the political opposition.

Politics and Human Rights

Hun Sen led Cambodia for 38 years (1985-2023), including as premier of the Vietnam-backed Republic of Kampuchea (1985-1993). He had been president of the ruling Cambodian People's Party (CPP) since 1993. In 2023, Hun Sen relinquished his position as prime minister while retaining his leadership of the CPP. In a widely expected move, Hun Sen transferred power to his eldest son, Hun Manet, who was elected to the National Assembly for the first time and endorsed by the body as the new prime minister. In February 2024, the CPP won 55 out of 58 seats in Cambodian Senate elections, which are chosen by local commune council members. The Senate unanimously elected Senator Hun Sen as its president, a largely ceremonial position. The King of Cambodia, Norodom Sihamoni, is head of state and a largely symbolic figure.

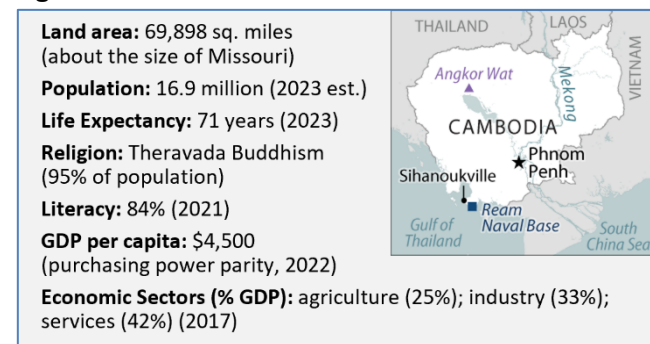

Some observers do not expect Hun Manet, a graduate of West Point and New York University, to usher in major policy changes in the near term. Others speculate that the new prime minister, as well as a new generation of cabinet appointees, may reset Cambodia's relations with the United States and the West and usher in greater engagement.

Between 1993, when the United Nations administered Cambodia's first national election following the 1991 Paris Agreements that ended the country's civil war, and 2017, democratic institutions and practices had gradually evolved to allow widespread civic and political participation. The opposition Cambodian National Rescue Party (CNRP) made significant gains in the 2013 parliamentary election and 2017 local elections. Meanwhile, Hun Sen employed a variety of means to stay in power, including through electoral victories, legal and extralegal political maneuvers, influence over the judiciary, broadcast media, and labor unions, and through patronage, cronyism, violence and intimidation.

In November 2017, the Supreme Court of Cambodia issued a ruling that dissolved the CNRP for "conspiring with the United States to overthrow the government," which the CNRP and U.S. government denied. In the 2018 and 2023

National Assembly elections, the CPP won 125 seats and 120 seats (out of 125 total seats), respectively. The State Department released a statement declaring, "The United States is troubled that the [2023] Cambodian national elections were neither free nor fair" and announced that steps had been taken to impose visa restrictions on individuals who were deemed to have undermined Cambodia's democracy.

Figure 1. Cambodia at a Glance

Source: CRS (map) and Central Intelligence Agency, The World Factbook, 2024.

In what many observers view as politically motivated actions, Cambodian courts have convicted opposition leader and former CNRP President Sam Rainsy, who lives in self-imposed exile in France, of numerous crimes. In October 2022, Sam Rainsy was convicted in absentia to life in prison, on top of previous sentences. In April 2023, former CNRP Vice-President Kem Sokha was convicted of treason and sentenced to 27 years of house arrest. In 2021 and 2022, Cambodian courts tried over 115 former members of the CNRP and other political activists, convicting 67 of them and sentencing them to prison terms of five to 18 years. Many former CNRP members had fled abroad and were tried in absentia. Cambodian-American lawyer and democratic activist Theary Seng is serving a six-year sentence on the charge of treason.

The Cambodian government limits civil society, press freedom, and freedom of expression, including through a restrictive 2017 law on nongovernmental organizations and through defamation lawsuits, disapproval of permits and licenses, and harassment of journalists.

Economy

The Cambodian economy—which was largely destroyed during the leadership of the Communist Party of Kampuchea, also known as the Khmer Rouge (1975-1979), and subsequent conflicts—achieved an average annual growth rate of 8% between 1998 and 2019. The national poverty rate dropped from 33.8% in 2009 to 17.8% in 2019, according to the World Bank, due in part to growth in the manufacturing and services sectors. Following a downturn in 2020-2021 due to the COVID-19 pandemic, the economy has rebounded somewhat; GDP growth was 5% in 2023 and is forecast to expand by 5.8% in 2024, according to the Asian Development Bank.

The United States is Cambodia's second-largest trading partner after China, and its largest export market, purchasing 39.3% of Cambodia's exports in 2023. Cambodian exports to the United States totaled $11.6 billion in 2023 (compared to $12.2 billion in 2022), while imports from the United States amounted to $305 million. The largest Cambodian export items to the United States are electrical machinery, apparel, and leather goods, and the largest U.S. export items to Cambodia are vehicles. The garment sector—which is largely run by companies from China, Hong Kong, and Taiwan—forms a pillar of Cambodia's economy, employing over 750,000 workers, predominantly women. Garments, footwear, and travel accessories accounted for roughly half of Cambodian goods exports in 2023.

PRC Influence

China is a large economic benefactor to Cambodia, reducing the relative influence of other foreign aid providers. The PRC is the kingdom's largest foreign investor and a major source of financing, holding 41% of its foreign debt in 2023. China is Cambodia's largest source of imports, including fabric for the kingdom's garment industry.

PRC-backed infrastructure, hydropower projects, and business ventures have delivered some developmental benefits to Cambodia, but also have created or contributed to environmental problems, corruption, and disruptions and dislocation among some local communities. PRC investment has been particularly concentrated in the city of Sihanoukville and elsewhere along the Gulf of Thailand, with development projects including the construction of tourist and gambling resorts, industrial zones, an international airport at Dara Sakor, and a deep-water seaport in Kampot province. Some U.S. analysts express concern that the airport and seaport could be used for PRC military as well as civilian purposes. PRC investors reportedly have left over 500 unfinished and abandoned buildings in Sihanoukville following the halt of construction during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Ream Naval Base

U.S. concerns have grown regarding PRC construction activities at Ream Naval Base on the Gulf of Thailand. In 2022, the PRC began working on upgrades on a section of the base, including dredging to enable it to accommodate larger vessels, a new pier, and repairs to the dry dock. Some experts say China may aim to use Ream to berth PRC military supply ships and accommodate visiting PRC warships, enabling China to project military power further from the Chinese mainland. Cambodian officials emphasize that hosting a foreign military facility would be unconstitutional, although the government may provide port access to multiple countries. PRC officials reportedly have denied that Cambodia has given China exclusive rights to Ream, although China appears to have taken control over a portion of the base, and has docked two naval vessels there since December 2023.

Foreign Assistance and Sanctions

Cambodia is dependent upon foreign aid. Official Development Assistance (ODA) for Cambodia from Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development member countries and international financial institutions totaled $1.1 billion in 2022. The United States provided $98 million in assistance to Cambodia in FY2023, mostly channeled through NGOs. Program areas include maternal and child health, combating infectious diseases, basic education, human rights and democracy, reducing human trafficking, economic growth, and natural resource management. Peace Corps volunteers teach English and train English teachers in Cambodian villages. The U.S. government has provided $208 million for unexploded ordnance (UXO) removal and related programs (1993-2023 data). Cambodia is among the countries most heavily contaminated by UXO left from U.S. bombing during the Vietnam War, the Vietnamese invasion of Cambodia in 1978, and civil wars during the 1970s and 1980s.

The United States has imposed restrictions on some foreign assistance to Cambodia in response to human rights concerns while continuing to provide support to Cambodian civil society. Some observers contend that Cambodian civil society, independent journalists, and urban youth may be particularly receptive to continued U.S. engagement.

Between 2017 and 2023, State, Foreign Operations, and Related Programs (SFOPS) appropriations legislation placed conditions on U.S. assistance to the government of Cambodia in response to its human rights policies. Since 2018, the U.S. government has sanctioned five Cambodian officials, and in some cases their family members as well, for corruption and human rights abuses pursuant to Executive Order 13818, which implements the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act (Title XII, Subtitle F of P.L. 114-328); three of the five Cambodian officials were also sanctioned under the SFOPS Section 7031(c) visa restrictions authority. In 2021, the Commerce and State Departments imposed export restrictions on U.S. national security-controlled items and a ban on arms sales to Cambodia due to human rights concerns.

SFOPS appropriations for 2024 (P.L. 118-47, Section 7043(b)) requires the Secretary of State to submit to Congress an assessment of the extent of the influence of the PRC in Cambodia, including with respect to the purposes and operations of Ream Naval Base. In addition, P.L. 118-47 requires that the visa restrictions authority under Section 7031(c) of the act be applied to Cambodian officials about whom the Secretary of State has credible information of having “been involved in the unlawful and wrongful detention” of Theary Seng, and provides $10 million for the Khmer Rouge genocide survivor program out of the Countering PRC Influence Fund (see the explanatory statement to P.L. 118-47, Division F).

For further information, see CRS Report R47311, Cambodia: Background and U.S. Relations.

Thomas Lum, Specialist in Asian Affairs

Disclaimer

This document was prepared by the Congressional Research Service (CRS). CRS serves as nonpartisan shared staff to congressional committees and Members of Congress. It operates solely at the behest of and under the direction of Congress. Information in a CRS Report should not be relied upon for purposes other than public understanding of information that has been provided by CRS to Members of Congress in connection with CRS's institutional role. CRS Reports, as a work of the United States Government, are not subject to copyright protection in the United States. Any CRS Report may be reproduced and distributed in its entirety without permission from CRS. However, as a CRS Report may include copyrighted images or material from a third party, you may need to obtain the permission of the copyright holder if you wish to copy or otherwise use copyrighted material.