Congress statutorily establishes a wide array of commissions, boards, and advisory bodies to provide it with assistance in conducting various legislative, investigative, and administrative responsibilities. Some of these entities are temporary and created to serve specific functions, such as studying a discrete policy area or performing a one-time task. Others are permanent, serving an ongoing purpose, such as overseeing an institution or performing a regular administrative function.

The majority of statutes establishing these congressional bodies provide for Members of Congress, particularly the leadership, to be involved in the appointment process. Leadership involvement generally occurs either through direct service or by appointing or recommending candidates for membership.

The choice of a particular mechanism for membership appointment may have implications for the ability of these entities to fulfill their congressional mandates. Several common approaches to membership selection exist, and each alternative schema involves trade-offs. For example, a commission or board composed entirely of Members might permit a high degree of congressional control, but also might not provide expertise that is well differentiated from that obtainable in internal congressional organizations. Bodies composed mainly of qualified private citizens or executive branch appointees may offer broader expertise than Member-only bodies but fewer opportunities for congressional control. Assemblages of mixed membership could provide some of the advantages of both Member- and citizen-only appointment schemes.

This report contains a compilation of existing commissions and boards that illustrates the range of alternative membership appointment structures. It includes any statutorily created advisory entity (e.g., boards, advisory panels, task forces) whose membership scheme mandates the participation of Members of Congress, either as potential members or as participants in the appointment process. This report provides information on the purpose, duration, appointment structure, and term of appointment for each entity. Additionally, a series of tables provides information on the involvement of Members of Congress—including House and Senate leaders, committee chairs, and ranking minority members—in the appointment process.

Introduction

Congress has created a wide array of advisory bodies, separate from each chamber's committees and officers, to aid with its legislative, oversight, and investigative mandates, and to attend to both temporary and ongoing administrative tasks and responsibilities. Hundreds of statutory entities have been created to study, advise on, coordinate, or monitor matters of particular interest to Congress. These entities vary along several dimensions, including their official designation, purpose, lifespan, membership, and membership appointment mechanisms.

Entities created to study, advise on, coordinate, or monitor matters of congressional interest can have a variety of names, including commissions, boards, advisory committees, or task forces. This report refers to all of these entities as "congressional advisory bodies." Sometimes these groups address a single purpose—to study a discrete policy issue or to attend to one-time or recurring administrative functions. Often, they have a well-defined mandate, which may include the submission of a final report with detailed findings and recommendations. Although some have a specific lifespan, others provide ongoing support and advice (e.g., the boards of visitors for the U.S. military service academies).

The majority of congressional advisory body statutes provide for a particular role for Members of Congress. This can include Members serving on the commission; choosing members; or making recommendations to an appointing authority, often the President. This report addresses only those statutory groups whose membership involves congressional participation in one or more of these forms. It provides selected background information on these groups and specific information relating to the role of Members of Congress in the appointment process.

This report includes information to inform Members of Congress of their specific appointment responsibilities and their opportunities to serve as members of congressional advisory bodies.

Scope

This compilation attempts to identify all current advisory bodies on which Members of Congress serve directly, or for which they make appointments or recommend potential members to another appointing authority (e.g., the President). It includes any statutorily created advisory entity (e.g., boards, advisory panels, task forces) whose membership scheme mandates the participation of Members of Congress, either as potential members or as participants in the appointment process. The report omits entities created by Congress that have neither congressional membership nor congressional involvement in the appointment process.¹ Boards and commissions for which the Senate has "advise and consent" authority are also omitted, unless Members of Congress otherwise participate in the appointment process.

Also excluded are ad hoc commissions and advisory groups empaneled by individual congressional committees under their general authority to procure the "temporary services" of consultants to "make studies or advise the committee with respect to any matter within its jurisdiction," pursuant to 2 U.S.C. §4301, or under chamber rules or resolutions. The report also excludes congressional member organizations (i.e., caucuses), observer groups, or working groups created by means other than statute.

¹ See, for example, the membership appointment scheme for the Advisory Commission on Drug-Free Communities (21 U.S.C. §1543), established by P.L. 105-20 (111 Stat. 232 [1997]). The President statutorily made all appointments to the commission without congressional involvement.

Tracking the provisions of law that create congressional advisory bodies is an inherently inexact exercise. Although Congress creates many advisory bodies in easily identifiable freestanding measures, others are established by provisions of lengthy omnibus legislation.² It is sometimes difficult to determine when entities have ceased operations,³ as termination dates are not always included in the organic statute. Also, Congress sometimes amends the entities' authority to provide additional time, and termination dates might be tied to dates not set in statute, such as the date of the commission's first meeting.

Membership Composition

When making appointments to congressional advisory bodies, Members of Congress may be empowered to act independently or in concert with other Members. Structurally, variations in the authority of appointment officials fall within several common patterns.

Direct Designation

The statutory scheme may mandate that membership of a congressional advisory body be made up in whole or in part by specifically designated Members of Congress, typically members of the House and Senate leadership or the chair and/or ranking member of specified committees.

Most such cases involve bodies that are concerned with the internal administrative functions of the House and Senate. For example, the Congressional Commission to Appoint the Architect of the Capitol includes

- the Speaker of the House;
- the minority leader of the House;
- the majority and minority leaders of the Senate; and
- the chairs and the ranking minority members of the Committee on House Administration, the Senate Rules and Administration Committee, the House Appropriations Committee, and the Senate Appropriations Committee.⁴

Appointment

Selected House and Senate leaders may appoint congressional advisory body members, who may or may not be Members of Congress. Statutes that assign appointment authority to congressional leadership generally mandate that both majority and minority leaders appoint members. Sometimes majority and minority leaders make an equal number of appointments.⁵ In other instances, the majority party appoints a greater number.⁶ In a few cases, the majority/minority

² For example, the FY1999 Omnibus Consolidated and Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act (P.L. 105-277; 112 Stat. 2681 [1998]) included provisions for 12 separate advisory bodies.

³ In at least one instance, a commission mandated by law never formally organized. Membership selection for the Commission on State and Private Forests (16 U.S.C. §1601 note; P.L. 101-624; 104 Stat. 3548 [1990]) was not completed, apparently due to presidential reservations about the appropriateness of the appointment scheme (see "Separation of Powers" below).

ratio of appointments to a commission varies, depending upon whether the President is of the same party as the majority in the House or the Senate.

One possible component of statutory appointment schemes for certain congressional advisory bodies is a requirement that Members of Congress serve on the panel. For example, certain bodies, such as the United States Group of the British-American Interparliamentary Group, are composed entirely of Members of Congress. In other instances, a statute may require that a certain number of Senators or Representatives be selected.⁷ Conversely, some statutes prohibit Members of Congress from serving.⁸

In instances where a statute provides for appointments by the President pro tempore of the Senate, federal law specifies involvement of the majority and minority leaders of the Senate.⁹

Recommendation

Selected House and Senate leaders, again often with balance between the parties, may be authorized to recommend members for appointment to a congressional advisory body. The appointees may or may not be Members of Congress; congressional leaders may make recommendations either in parallel or jointly; and the recommendations may be made to other congressional leaders, such as the Speaker of the House and President pro tempore of the Senate, or to the President or other executive branch officials.

Qualification Provisos

Some statutory provisos may have the effect of limiting the degree of autonomy a Member of Congress has in appointing or recommending individuals for congressional advisory body membership. For example, the statute might specify that the appointing official shall select members who are specifically qualified by virtue of their education, knowledge, training, experience, expertise, distinguished service, or recognized eminence in a particular field or fields.¹⁰ In other instances, appointments are expressly limited to individuals occupying specific had a three-to-two advantage in making appointments to the commission (36 U.S.C. note prec. §101; P.L. 106-173; 114 Stat. 15 [2000]).

⁹ 2 U.S.C. §199. The statute states “Any provision of law which provides that any member of a commission, board, committee, advisory group, or similar body is to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate shall be construed to require that the appointment be made—(1) upon recommendation of the Majority Leader of the Senate, if such provision of law specifies that the appointment is to be made on the basis of the appointee’s affiliation with the majority political party, (2) upon the recommendation of the Minority Leader of the Senate, if such provision of law specifies that the appointment is to be made on the basis of the appointee’s affiliation with the minority party, and (3) upon the joint recommendation of the Majority Leader of the Senate and the Minority Leader of the Senate, if such provision of law does not specify that the appointment is to be made on the [basis of the] appointee’s affiliation with the majority or minority political party.”

federal, state, or local government positions; representing a particular occupation; or serving as head of a particular public or private sector institution or organization.

Separation of Powers

In many instances, the executive and legislative branches share the authority to appoint members to the entities covered in this report.¹¹ When the President (or other executive branch official) and Members of Congress share statutory appointment authority, questions about implementation of the appointment scheme have sometimes prompted the President to comment on separation-of-powers issues raised under the Appointments Clause of the Constitution. For example, in the signing statement accompanying the creation of the Commission on Interoperable Data Sharing, President George W. Bush noted that methods of selection included in the Appointments Clause of the Constitution include “appointment by the President with Senate consent or by the President alone,” but not by the President “from a pool of persons selected by the congressional leadership.”¹² Similarly, in a statement accompanying the signing of legislation creating the Brown v. Board of Education 50th Anniversary Commission,¹³ President Bush made it clear that he would not be bound by the House’s and Senate’s membership recommendations required by the statute, but would rather “welcome, as a matter of comity, the suggestions of the congressional leadership for those positions.”¹⁴

Organization of the Report

This report includes information on each CRS-identified, currently functioning congressional advisory body.¹⁵ The report divides commissions into two groups: temporary advisory commissions and permanent entities.¹⁶ For each entity, a table provides a brief summary of the entity’s purpose or role, as well as the following information:

- Statutory Duration of the Advisory Body. The report includes a termination date, where applicable. The termination date may be a specific calendar date or a date tied to a specific commission event, such as final report submission.¹⁷

¹² U.S. President (G.W. Bush), “Statement on Signing the Enhanced Border Security and Visa Entry Reform Act of 2002,” Weekly Compilation of Presidential Documents, vol. 38 (March 14, 2002), p. 822, at <https://www.govinfo.gov/content/pkg/WCPD-2002-05-20/html/WCPD-2002-05-20-Pg822.htm>. Board of Education 50th Anniversary Commission,” Weekly Compilation of Presidential Documents, vol. 37, September 24, 2001, pp. 1336-1337, at <https://www.govinfo.gov/content/pkg/WCPD-2001-09-24/html/WCPD-2001-09-24-Pg1336.htm>.

¹⁵ It is sometimes difficult to determine whether entities have been formally organized or when they ceased operations. In cases in which CRS was not able to locate definitive evidence that an entity was not formally organized or has ceased operations, the entity is included in the report.

¹⁷ In some instances, the statutory duration of the advisory body may have been extended beyond the date reflected in this report. The search methodology used for this report may not have identified that extension. In other cases, an advisory body might still be operational even though its statutory termination date appears to have passed. For (continued...)

- FACA Applicability. Many advisory bodies established or utilized by the executive branch are subject to the Federal Advisory Committee Act (FACA), which governs their creation, administration, and management.¹⁸ FACA does not apply to other entities included in the report, such as advisory bodies that are appointed by and report only to Congress, bodies exempted from FACA by their authorizing legislation, and independent agencies. The General Services Administration (GSA) maintains a FACA database. The report indicates for each entity whether it is listed as a FACA committee in the FACA database.¹⁹
- Membership Appointment Structure. Each entry includes the advisory body's membership appointment scheme, listing the Members of Congress involved in appointments, their roles, and the number of appointments in which they are involved. Where applicable, entries also list the appointment roles of noncongressional officials. For Member appointments, the Member's role is provided in parentheses in the left-hand column.
- Term of Appointment. Most congressional advisory bodies have fixed terms of appointment set by statute. Statutes creating temporary commissions often provide that appointments are for the "life of the commission."

Listing of Individual Advisory Bodies

The entries in this report highlight the broad diversity of matters Congress has felt deserved examination beyond the established congressional structure. The report arranges commissions alphabetically in two categories: temporary advisory commissions and permanent entities. Each entry includes citations to public laws, the U.S. Code, and the Statutes at Large, as appropriate. If available, the entry includes the commission's website.

The report also includes tables with information about the involvement of particular Members of Congress (e.g., the Speaker of the House or Senate majority leader) in the appointment process. Table 1 through Table 6 list the appointment responsibilities of congressional leadership. Table 7 lists committee appointment responsibilities, which are most frequently assigned to the committee chairs or ranking minority members.²⁰ Table 8 lists other Members of Congress who have appointment authority to a commission, board, or group.

example, as of January 2026, the statutory termination date for the National Advisory Committee on Institutional Quality and Integrity was September 30, 2024. The Department of Education published a notice in the Federal Register in December 2025, with a list of committee members whose terms expire on September 30, 2031. The FACA Database might not include all entities that are or would be subject to FACA. For example, some FACA committees may not have been established or reported to the General Services Administration as of the latest update to the database.

²⁰ For example, the Commission for the Judiciary Office Building includes the chair and ranking minority member of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, the chair and ranking minority member of the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works, and the chair and ranking minority member of the House Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure (40 U.S.C. §6503; P.L. 100-480; 102 Stat. 2334 [1988]).
